Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN

First of a series

Charity is big business in the Northwest suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-athon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herald survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 20.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

- Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Bianco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $85.

• Irwin Horwitz, 9210 Church St., Des Plaines, is a 12-year-old former salesman for the National Youth Clubs of America Inc. Together with his friend Edward Rosenberg of Des Plaines, Horwitz joined a team of youthful door-to-door candy sales people in the north suburbs in September 1973. He dropped out of the group following a dispute with a team leader.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. I'm poor and I want to get money to go to Disneyland. I need to sell 500 boxes of candy and I've sold 492 boxes. Would you buy one?'" The youth's commission on the sale of a $1.75 box of candy was a quarter, "and if you're the best seller of the day you get an extra dollar," Horwitz said. The "big guy in the organization" was Morrie Friedman, he said.

Industrial park draws shoppers—and criminals

by JERRY THOMAS

Like a pushcart full of apples, Elk Grove Village's industrial park offers a tantalizing array of "goodies" that appeal both to the legitimate shopper and the criminal element.

Last year thieves checked out with more than $400,000 in "goodies." Unique among communities in the Northwest suburban area, Elk Grove Village industrial park boasts nearly 2,000 businesses and factories and employs about 25,000 workers.

Sgt. Ronald Iden of Elk Grove Village police describes the village's 25,000 residential population area and its 25,000 industrial worker population as "twins that pose different police protection problems."

The 1974 police statistics attribute the $400,000 property loss to thefts, burglaries and robberies from the industrial park.

IDEN SAID police estimate that 70 per cent of all crimes such as thefts, burglaries and robberies investigated are committed in the industrial park.

"It's a juicy plum, and probably the hoodlum's idea of a shopper's paradise," Iden said. "It's the police department's job to make sure the industrial park is not easy pickings and receives all the protection possible."

"It's not just the factory owner who suffers a loss when his plant gets hit by hoods. We all pay," Iden said. "The larger loss, the bigger the price tag on the items he has left to sell, so it makes sense to help keep thefts down."

INDUSTRIALISTS AND business-men polled by The Herald generally expressed satisfaction with the police protection the industrial park receives.

Of 20 plants contacted, only one expressed minor irritation about how the police department handled a burglary incident. The dissatisfied plant manager said he was unhappy "because only half of the burglary loot was recovered."

Stanley Klyber, vice president of the Elk Grove Assn. of Industry and Commerce, which represents a majority of the industries in the park, said police protection is often discussed at association meetings.

"We realize a park the size of ours demands police protection far in excess of what a residential community would require," Klyber said.

HE SAID Elk Grove Village police have done an exceptional job of protecting the industrial park.

"The department not only solves a high percentage of our theft and burglaries by apprehending the criminals, but often is able to return the goods stolen," he said.

Iden said police would be aided in combating crime if workers would

Bicycle rodeo brings out 'easy riders' of all ages

by JERRY THOMAS

Bicyclists did a lot of fancy riding Saturday at the annual Bicycle Rodeo sponsored by the Elk Grove Village Park District Bicycle Club and Junior Woman's Club at Lions Park.

Although the parking lot was filled with cyclists vying in a variety of races and obstacle-course runs that ranged from the "snail race" to figure-8s, there was not a "wheelie popper" in sight.

The rodeo was designed to test a bicyclist's skills and stress safety.

Most of the participants were youngsters between 9 and 12. But there were a few mothers and fathers who brought their families.

DAN GILBERT brought his family of five, Gilbert said he and his wife, Ruth, sons Steve, 13; Joe, 11, and Danny, 2, all cycle. "Most of the time Danny is a passenger," Gilbert said. Gilbert said the rodeo is "a great sport for any age and is the perfect opportunity to restress the safe biking rules we follow on our rides around town or elsewhere."

He said if more people would stop thinking of their children's bikes as toys and instead as vehicles there would be far fewer bicycle injuries and accidents.

Gilbert said the family logs at least 20 miles every day.

"It's frightening, but I have witnessed at least five incidents of near accidents, or bikers' actions that could have led to their death, every night I ride," Gilbert said.

He believes safety education and learning the bicycle rules of the road make better and safer drivers.

AT THE BIKE rodeo movies stressed the fact that it doesn't make any difference what you are driving — bicycle, car, truck, motorcycle, or

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "...if it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Greiman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Latsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

• Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

Oil-recycling plan
a first for state

Des Plaines will start an oil-recycling project — the first of its kind in the state — Saturday at the city's recycling center on Oakton Street. Researchers have estimated that a statewide recycling program could save up to 18 million gallons of oil per year. The pilot program in Des Plaines, along with similar programs starting soon in Glen Ellyn and Naperville, will be studied to determine what effect a statewide program would have on easing the energy crisis.

Teachers charge underassessment

A coalition of north suburban teachers charged Sunday that two suburban shopping centers are underassessed by $17 million, resulting in an annual loss of $1.4 million in school tax revenue. The North Suburban Unified Bargaining Council charged that County Assessor Thomas Tully has underassessed the Old Orchard shopping center, Skokie, and the Deerbrook Mall shopping center, Deerfield. "We have discovered through our research that some of the biggest shopping centers in the north suburbs are owned by big real estate developers from Chicago who have heavy political connections with Tom Tully," said Claire Hyman, spokeswoman for the NSUBC. She said the group will release information Thursday on six other shopping centers it says are substantially underassessed.

Crash kills Arlington Hts. youth

A 16-year-old Arlington Heights youth was killed Friday night when he was thrown from the passenger seat of a car as it rolled over. Killed was Joel G. Ortmann, 1336 N. Belmont St. Police said the car in which Ortmann was riding was northbound on Kennelott Ave. near Grove Street, Arlington Heights, when it passed another car. Police said the car struck the curb after pulling back into its lane and then rolled over once.

48-vote loser asks partial recount

Norma Murawski, defeated by 48 votes in her bid for election to the Mount Prospect Village Board, has filed for a partial recount of five precincts. "I just felt compelled to go ahead with this," said Mrs. Murawski, 47, of 1826 Pheasant Tr. "With so many paper ballots and split votes, there is always room for error."

Two arrested with explosives

Two men, one a Buffalo Grove resident, were charged Saturday with possession of explosives, unlawful use of weapons and possession of marijuana. In custody are Clark Meunier, 28, of 11 Oak Creek Dr., Buffalo Grove, and John Zielski, also 28, of Kenosha, Wis. Sheriff's police said the men were in possession of an explosive device and weapons when arrested, but refused to discuss the case further.

FAA sets Palwaukee-noise talks

What's already been done about noise from Palwaukee Airport and what else can be done will be the subject of a meeting May 7 between the Wheeling Environmental Commission and the Federal Aviation Administration. "We'd like this to be a give and take session and get feedback from the village on what else they think we can do to control the noise problem at Palwaukee," said Al Read, an FAA official. The FAA started some noise control measures at Palwaukee in February, mainly in setting new altitude requirements for takeoffs and arrivals.

Building director to be named

Wheeling Village Mgr. George Passolt says he's almost ready to announce the name of the new building director. The job has been vacant since February 1974 when William Bleber resigned after pleading guilty to federal charges of extortion, conspiracy to commit extortion, perjury and filing a false income-tax return. Robert Kawinski, village electrical engineer, has been serving as acting building director.

Attorney addresses state LWV

Jenner defends right to impeach

by BOB LAHEY

The renowned Chicago attorney who advised Republican members of the House committee considering impeachment of President Richard Nixon on Sunday addressed the Illinois League of Women Voters Saturday as "an evil man."

Albert E. Jenner Jr., who has served on presidential commissions under three Presidents, and who served as Republican minority counsel to the House Judiciary Committee, was the speaker at the annual banquet of the Illinois League of Women Voters at the O'Hare Inn, Rosemont. Jenner, who describes himself as a lifelong Republican, declared, "The impeachment process cleansed the office of the President of an evil man who was consumed with avarice and greed."

IN A LECTURE spiced with historical notes on the development of the Bill of Rights and civil liberties, Jenner defended the impeachment proceedings that led to Nixon's resignation and warned that Americans must stand ready to impeach anyone who abuses the power of the Presidency.

Jenner adopted as a theme of his address words used by U.S. Rep. James R. Mann, D-S.C., during debate on the impeachment. Mann asked, "Who knows but what the next time, there may be no watchman in the night?" referring to the security guard who discovered the break-in at Democratic National Headquarters in the Watergate building.

He said repeatedly that the citizens themselves must be the "watchmen in the night" who scrutinize the actions of public officials who would abuse the Constitution.

"The highest crime, the worst possible crime in a free and open society is that which will erode, corrupt and subvert the institutions of the people," Jenner declared.

He said Nixon and his aides engaged in a systematic "erosion and corrosion" of individual liberties. At one point he charged that Nixon lied "to you on every occasion that he addressed you from the spring of 1974 until the day of his resignation."

JENNER SAID many of the crimes of the Nixon administration stemmed from a conscious effort to subvert the electoral process, which he called "absolutely the only way to preserve

Walker urges defeat of party-declaration bill

Gov. Daniel Walker, appealing for public support of his legislative proposals, Saturday devoted special attention to a plea for defeat of a primary-election bill sponsored by State Sen. John Nimrod, R-Skokie.

Walker addressed the annual convention of the Illinois League of Women Voters Saturday evening. Warning that many "good" bills could die in legislative committees this week as the deadline approaches for committee action, he asked League members to rally to Springfield to "keep up the heat on faint-hearted legislators."

Among proposals that Walker said he feared would be killed in committee are those on women's rights, individual privacy, governmental ethics and consumer protection.

BUT HE SAID he expected strong support for Nimrod's bill, which would require voters to register their party affiliation five months before the primary election.

"This bill would require you to say even before you know who is going to be on the ballot, which party you prefer," Walker said.

Walker said the bill had the support of many legislators who favor the "club system" of politics.

"If you are a member of the club, you are entitled to hold public office. If you're not a member of the club you're not even entitled to vote."

The Democratic governor, whom many believed won the 1972 primary with the help of many Republican "crossover" votes, declared, "I am not, I have never been, and I never will be a member of the club."

Walker said frankly there is a "great probability" that most of his favored legislative proposals will be killed in committee. These include bills to strengthen women's rights in credit, home mortgages, insurance and admission to private clubs; to widen requirements for financial disclosures by public officials; to give individuals rights to files concerning them in credit offices and governmental agencies; and a package of bills on consumer protection.

a free and open society."

Among the abuses he listed were:

- The "sale" of ambassadorships to raise campaign funds.
  - The illegal diversion of Republican Senate Campaign Committee funds for use in other elections.
  - Use of presidential election funds to pay off Watergate burglars in "hush money."
  - Interference with the FBI and the CIA in an attempt to prevent discovery of the election abuses.
- These and other acts, he said, required the impeachment process to "restore the presidency and rid it of an evil man."

But, he warned, the people must not become complacent because "the system worked."

"Yeah, the system worked — it worked awfully late," he said.

Jenner concluded, "It is the duty of society, of the League of Women Voters and of other organizations to be watchmen in the night."

'Big' Minh elected to head South Vietnam

SAIGON (UPI) — South Vietnam's congress unanimously elected Gen. Duong Van "Big" Minh as president Sunday in an 11th-hour attempt to turn imminent military defeat into a negotiated peace. Political sources said Minh would immediately ask for an American withdrawal from Vietnam.

Meeting between the first two rocket attacks on Saigon in more than three years, the national assembly voted 134-0 for Minh — hero of the 1963 coup that overthrew President Ngo Dinh Diem — to succeed President Tran Van Huong and gave him authority to seek peace with the Communists.

Political sources said Minh would take power Monday and would ask for a U.S. withdrawal from Vietnam so he could arrange a coalition with the Viet Cong.

It was unclear whether Minh intended to ask all Americans to leave, or whether the U.S. embassy would remain open with a token staff.

In Paris, the Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government issued a communique calling for abolition of the Saigon administration as a prerequisite for peace. But it made no mention of the election of Minh, who himself is considered a neutralist.

The Communists, while rejecting other South Vietnamese leaders, have never said they would refuse to negotiate with Minh. Asked by UPI Sunday whether they would talk with Minh, Viet Cong press officer Phuong Nam said only that "anyone who loves peace... would be acceptable."

Minh's election came only hours after Communist forces sent five rockets thundering into Saigon — the first shelling of the capital since December, 1971.

What Minh inherits is a battlefield situation in which Communist forces control three-fourths of South Vietnam and 23 of its 44 provinces, and have an estimated 150,000 troops with tanks, artillery and rockets within striking range of the capital itself.

Both U.S. and Saigon leaders appeared convinced the reopening of peace talks — called off by Saigon a year ago — was the only hope of saving Saigon from total defeat within days.

Minh, called "Big" because of his size — over six feet tall and hefty, is expected to try to open talks with the Communists and win a share of power in a three-part coalition which also would include the Viet Cong and the left-of-center "third political force" which claims to support neither side in the war.

The Communists had flatly refused to negotiate with Thieu or with Huong, whose government, they said, amounted to "a Thieu administration without Thieu."

The Viet Cong's Phuong Nam said the United States must stay completely out of the Vietnamese political and military situation if peace talks were held.

GEN. DUONG VAN "BIG" MINH

Communists penetrate northern Saigon outskirts

SAIGON (UPI) — Communist troops penetrated the northern outskirts of Saigon late Sunday, digging in near the headquarters of the U.S. Agency for International Development and driving back government counterattacks.

Military sources said Viet Cong commandos struck near USAID headquarters, blocking Highway 1 on the northern edge of Saigon.

They holed up and resisted government artillery and air strikes. The most of the USAID compound was burned down in the fighting, field reports said.

It was the closest fighting to Saigon of the current offensive, although only a small Communist force was involved. The bridge is about three miles from downtown Saigon.

Capital reserve forces moved to the bridge early Monday in an effort to dislodge the dug-in commandos. The paratroopers gathered at the south end of the span in an apparent effort to organize an assault force.

In other assaults, North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops fired rockets into Saigon and heavily shelled Bien Hoa and Long Binh bases and other positions within five miles of the city.

Either on the battlefield or by negotiation, the war appeared to be nearing its end. South Vietnamese senate president Tran Van Lam conceded the shooting war to the Communists: "We are beaten. We accept humiliation."

Spurred on by a barrage of five rockets that struck the city before dawn — the first such attack on the city since December, 1971 — the national assembly named Gen. Duong Van "Big" Minh to succeed President Tran Van Huong and gave him a go-ahead to seek peace.

Three hours after the assembly's action, Communist gunners again opened up on Saigon with rockets — four rounds, apparently 122mm — which landed in the downtown area, on the government's naval compound and in the Saigon river. Scores of civilians were reported killed or wounded in the two attacks.

North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces captured Ba Ria, 35 miles southeast of Saigon and the capital of Phuoc Tuy province, and expanded the chain of 150,000 men, tanks, artillery and rockets they are forging around Saigon.

The loss of Ba Ria also posed a threat to Vung Tau, the last deep-water port still in government hands. Ba Ria is on Highway 15, a major link between Saigon and Vung Tau.

Other Communist forces closing in on the government's major air base at Bien Hoa, 14 miles northeast of Saigon, opened fire with mortars and rockets on the crowds of refugees trapped between the base and the capital.

The refugees were fleeing Bien Hoa for the comparative safety of Saigon, but South Vietnamese troops — fearing Communist commandos could slip in with them — turned them back.

Military analysts said Bien Hoa and its nearby sister base of Long Binh likely would be the next major Communist targets. The government already has moved its fighter-bombers from there to Saigon's Tan Son Nhut air base, and placed Bien Hoa and its population of 300,000 under a 24-hour curfew.

A GOVERNMENT SOLDIER threatens to swing at some refugees trying to move through barricades on road in Long Binh South Vietnam. The road leads to Saigon and Bien Hoa. The refugees' papers are being checked to prevent Communists from infiltrating their ranks.

High cost of legislation tabulated

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — Illinois taxpayers spend at least $340 every time one of their legislators decides to introduce a bill.

But that's just for starters. The total, after paying salaries, overtime and overhead, can add up to $4,000 for a bill which actually becomes law.

About 4,500 bills will be introduced this session.

The taxpayers start paying even before the legislator finally decides to submit his bill. When he calls the Legislative Council to have his idea researched — even if he just wants to find out what other states are doing — it can cost $122.

An additional $131 is spent when he submits his rough draft to the Legislative Reference Bureau. The LRB, with its staff of lawyers, actually writes the final draft of most bills and is required to check each measure for legal style before its introduction.

If the idea survives those two examinations, it goes to the printer. This year the printer charges an average of $25.50 to print the required 1,000 copies of each bill.

As soon as the bill is printed, its summary goes into the Legislative Digest, which lists bills by number. Whether the bill passes, dies in debate or quietly withers in committee, its Since Illinois lawmakers have introduced bills at a near-record pace this session and since it has been years since anyone seriously tried to pin down the cost of a bill introduction, UPI's Springfield Intern, Chuck Abbott, hauled out his budget-battered ledger sheets and produced the following report.

summary will appear in each week's Digest at a cost of $10.10 a page. An average bill appears for 20 weeks and takes a half page — total cost, $101. Some of that cost is recovered by selling subscriptions to the Digest.

But there are more ways than the Digest to find bills. The Legislative Information System, a computer memory, will report on a screen the status of bills by sponsor, number, committee and topic. It costs $161 to get an average bill into that system and keep it up to date.

About $540 now has been spent without any questions about the need for the bill. But it is ready for committee hearings where its cost zooms by another $100 to $600.

Before the committee chairman invites the proud sponsor to explain his bill, each party's staff will have analyzed it. That costs between $28 and $500, depending on who does the analysis. If a legislative intern — a student earning $100 a week for the experience of working in the legislature — examines the bill, the cost is at the low end of the scale. Scrutiny by a fulltime staff member is far more costly.

Assuming the bill survives the committee, it goes to the floor for amendments. But first a few other items are rung on the cash register.

Before a member can say one word about the bill on the floor, money is needed to post the measure in the calendar — a daily booklet telling legislators which bills are ready for action. Once the bill appears on the calendar, it and the $13.75-a-page cost are repeated daily until the bill passes or fails.

Amendments frequently are needed and the printer (remember him?) is happy to supply as many as the legislators want. He charges $6.63 a page for a House amendment and $6.54 a page for a Senate amendment.

When a bill is ready for passage by either chamber, $1.20 is spent to print 12 copies with all the amendments fitted into the body of the bill.

By this time, the bill also has appeared at least twice in the Journal — the official record of House and Senate proceedings. Because of differing type sizes used in that document, a bill costs $8.20 a page for typesetting. A typical bill takes four pages. And binding those four pages costs another $9.38.

The bill now has cost between $700 and $1,200 to get through one house of legislature in business in the first place.

The legislators' salaries, Springfield and home district expenses, heating, lighting, janitorial service and other odds and ends eat up well over $10 million a year.

If that cost is spread evenly among the total number of anticipated bill introductions, the cost of the average measure soars by another $2,500.

The total bottom-line cost — whether to make the opossum the official state animal or to abolish death penalty — thus could be pegged at $4,000 to $4,500. A simple measure would cost less. An especially long or complicated one could cost much more.

Haig, then White House chief of staff, and other insiders slowly and carefully persuaded Nixon he had no course but to resign.

Fire truck ride ends in death

The auction at the Baptist Church in the tiny Woodbury, Ga. community had been a huge success with enough money raised to build a shed for a new fire truck. Then someone suggested taking the kids for a ride on the truck. The truck wound its way along the rural roads, then, as it started down a steep hill, the brakes gave way. At the foot of the hill, the weight of the water tanks and the people hanging on the back caused the truck to overturn. Four persons — including three children — were killed and 32 were injured, most of them children.

New probe of JFK, other deaths to be asked

Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, R-Conn., says he will ask Congress to formally investigate the murders of President Kennedy, Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. and the wounding of Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace. McKinney said he will submit a resolution calling for a select House committee of seven members with subpoena powers to conduct a full investigation of the four shootings. The lawmaker said he was "not given to believing in conspiracies" but the revelations of Watergate "have shown us a small but sordid side of our society."

Ford to veto farm price support bill

President Ford is set to announce early this week a veto of an emergency farm price support bill the administration claims could add $1.8 billion to the federal deficit, agriculture aides say. Ford's opposition is said to center on the cost and on Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz' contention the bill would lead back toward an era of costly food surpluses, government controls and higher consumer food costs.

Winds, frigid temperatures halt rescue try

Winds to 70 miles per hour, frigid temperatures and "whiteouts" Sunday drove rescue teams back down icy Mt. St. Helens, in Stevenson, Wash., where they had been searching for six hikers missing in a spring avalanche. Three students were reported killed late Saturday in the avalanche when spring snow, balanced on "ball bearing" type crystals, crashed down the 9,677-foot peak into the 29-person party, sweeping six of the hikers away.

Dangers of silicone treatments told

Liquid silicone breast injections have caused the death of at least four women and disfigured many others, according to a government research paper obtained Sunday. "Amputation of the breasts has been necessary in numerous cases to prevent gangrene or potentially fatal migration of silicone particles to the brain, lungs and heart," the paper says.

A spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration gave a copy of the previously undisclosed paper — an internal agency report known as a "talking paper" — to UPI in response to an inquiry.

The official Soviet news agency, Tass, Sunday reported the successful completion of a worldwide Soviet naval exercise which Pentagon analysts said was the biggest in Red Navy history. It involved 200 ships and six oceans. "The naval forces involved demonstrated high combat efficiency. After practicing their tasks, they have returned to their bases," Tass said.

Bicycle rodeo brings out 'easy riders' of all ages

even if you are walking — everyone must obey the traffic laws.

Instructors and judges said the same rules of the road that apply to motorists apply to cyclists.

More than 150 persons competed in the various events scheduled throughout the day. Police had registered and handed out 60 free bicycle-license tags by noon. Bike registration aids in recovery of stolen bikes and licenses may be obtained anytime at the police department at 901 Wellington Ave.

Mary Lou Staelde and her sons, Craig, 7, and Randy, 5, on their own bikes and Todd, 2, tucked behind her in a bike seat, were a bit breathless when they arrived at the rodeo.

"I just got a new bike and the ride here was a little over two miles and the longest ride we have taken this year," Mrs. Staelde said.

"I don't have a car and figure with all of us planning to do a lot of riding this summer we had better learn the safe way to do it," said Mrs. Staelde.

THE BIKE rodeo ended a weeklong series of bike events and safety sessions in the village.

Ardie Sorenson, president of the bike club, said the first event, a 64-mile ride, attracted 180 participants.

Schools in the area have held several obstacle-course races.

One girl who hopes to get a bike for her birthday went to the rodeo to pick up some tips.

"If you don't know how to ride the right way, you hurt yourself and the bike too," she said.

Industrial park attracts 'hard-working' thieves

notify police of suspicious activity.

"Concerned or just plain nosy neighbors save a lot of residential homes from looting and if we could convince workers in the industrial park to call the police when something looks fishy, it would be similar to having thousands of burglar alarms," he said.

He said a majority of workers seem to take the attitude that because they don't live there, thefts don't affect them.

"We usually gain a tipster after their personal auto is broken into in a parking lot where they work," Iden said.

STATISTICS FOR 1974 show a total of 909 thefts, an increase of 70 per cent over 1973; 342 burglaries, an increase of 50 per cent over 1973 and 18 armed robberies, an increase of 100 per cent over 1973.

"Although the increase in crimes is high and concerns us greatly, I feel the police department is doing a good job in protecting the industrial park," Iden said.

Except in a few instances, thefts in the industrial park are committed by amateurs, Iden said. "We've got a reputation in professional burglary circles as an aggressive department," Iden said.

Inside jobs and petty pilfering by employees are on the increase, said Iden. He attributes it in part to the economy.

A BURGLAR-ALARM system still is one of the best protections available, Iden said, and "there is hardly a business in the complex that does not have an alarm," he said.

"Big bells scare away burglars, but I prefer the silent alarm that signals us directly at the station or in a security watch office because it allows us to apprehend the culprit in the act," Iden said. Today's technology offers sonic light-beam or pressure-activated alarms that are extremely hard or near impossible to detect, Iden said.

In 1974 the department responded to 3,162 alarms. "About 90 per cent were accidentally set off or false alarms, but we don't resent it and treat each one as a burglary in progress," Iden said.

Iden credited the alertness of the patrol division in preventing many potential burglaries.

"We don't catch them all, but the police department's divisions make a joint effort to do the best we can," Iden said.

Bushy Berkeley film fest

Remember when movie musicals had fabulous production numbers with scores of chorus girls forming human fountains or mermaids glaze, or waltzing with glowing neon violins? Remember the days when stars like Dick Powell and Ruby Keeler, Jimmy Cagney and Ginger Rogers danced and sang numbers like "42nd Street," "Shuffle Off to Buffalo" and "We're in the Money"?

Those were the days when Busby Berkeley was the king of the Hollywood musicals. Film fans can take a quick trip back to the thrilling '30s at the Busby Berkeley Film Festival at the Elk Grove Village Public Library, May 4-19.

The films showing will be "42nd Street," "Footlight Parade" and "The Gold Diggers of 1933."

Admission is free. Call the library at 439-0447 for information.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Bufford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animals members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"If A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sales said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

SANDRA KEENEY holds some of the kittens Aid to Animals hopes to place in good homes. The roster of adoptable pets in the Palatine Township foster home usually includes 30 dogs and several cats.

Prowler flees home of Betty Spence

A prowler Friday fled the home of former U.S. congressional candidate Betty Spence after being detected by her son, said Buffalo Grove police.

Sgt. Kenneth Blanchette was told by John Spence, 19, that a man entered their home, 901 Westbourne Ln. about 1:45 p.m. The man, described as 5 feet 2 inches tall with light brown or blond shoulder-length hair with a light-colored shirt, fled through an attached garage.

Nothing was reported stolen from the home and there were no signs of forced entry, Blanchette said.

Herald opinion

Don't meddle with tax ratio

The Illinois House of Representatives is being asked, in two resolutions, to order a referendum which would allow voters to discard the current ratio between corporate and individual income taxes. We believe these resolutions to be ill-advised.

Under current law, corporations pay a 4 per cent tax on income, while individuals pay 2½ per cent. This conforms to the provision of the 1970 state constitution which dictates that "In any such (income) tax imposed upon corporations the rate shall not exceed the rate imposed on individuals by more than a ratio of 8 to 5."

Under resolutions sponsored by Rep. Clyde L. Choate, D-Ana, and Rep. Guy Stubblefield, D-Rockford, that limitation on corporate income taxes would be removed.

The idea of socking an added tax to businesses while giving individuals a break may be politically attractive to legislators. People vote; corporations don't.

But it would be irresponsible to pretend that the financial requirements of the state may be met by simply placing the tax burden on corporations. As one of the largest of the nation's industrial states, Illinois depends heavily upon the financial health of its businesses for its own economic well-being.

Distasteful as the thought of new or added taxes might be, it must be recognized that if they become necessary, they must be shared by all.

Delegates to the constitutional convention which arrived at the 8:5 ratio between corporate and individual income taxes recognized that fact, although they also agreed that industry is equipped to carry a larger burden than private citizens.

Arguments over whether those delegates arrived at precisely the correct formula are pointless. But we agree with the Illinois State Chamber of Commerce in its assessment that the constitutional convention represented "practically every political interest existing within the state." The formula on which they agreed has been in force for less than four years. We do not find any compelling argument for tampering with it at this time.

The state chamber has also pointed out that shifting the statutory burden for taxes to business is illusory; in the end it is the buying public which will pay the bill.

Rather than searching for devices which would allow added taxes in the self-deception that it costs the public nothing, the legislature — including representatives Choate and Stubblefield — should devote its efforts to finding ways to save money.

He blasts park hockey banquet

This letter is being written to you in the hope that it will be published in a future edition of The Herald. It concerns the Palatine Park District's hockey program.

I am sure you are well aware of the fact that the park district has a hockey program. Each boy participating contributes their hard-earned money to play for the Palatine Park District in their respective age groups.

This past year my son played for the district under the sponsorship of Kolo Realtors. His team was successful in winning their division championship and many of the boys within his division were successful in scoring multiple goals, which according to the amateur association entitles them to a patch for the "hat trick."

Each year it has been the practice for the Palatine Park District to hold an awards banquet, whereby each participating boy received his due recognition along with due team recognition.

Somehow this year, the hockey banquet was held without notification to each player as to where, how much and when the banquet would be held.

Consequently, the championship team in each division, according to the information I have, did not get to attend the banquet — or if they did, it was by "hit or miss" and/or word-of-mouth that the banquet was going to be held.

As a rather long-time resident of the Palatine Park District and having coached and managed teams in the park district in the various age levels, I was quite distressed to learn that the banquet has been held, but the championship teams in the junior division never received notification — either verbally or by letter — of the banquet. As a result, the boys have not received their awards, their patches and their due recognition for their efforts on behalf of the park district.

I think it is a shame that a boy can put out his hard-earned money, not to mention his efforts, to play for the park district and then not receive some recognition or the opportunity to attend the banquet.

I have written to the park district and have asked for an explanation, but I do not anticipate receiving any reply. Therefore, I would deeply appreciate it if this letter could be printed in The Herald so that all may learn of this situation. I would certainly not recommend that any boy put his efforts and his money into the Palatine Park District's hockey program in the future if awards and banquets are to be held in secrecy.

'Theater's tickets too costly'

In reading the article in this morning's edition about the financial troubles of the Arlington Park Theater, I feel compelled to shed a bit of light on the consumer's view as to why the theater was not successful. It simply priced itself out of reach for local support. At $15 per seat for the last show featuring the Gabor sisters, the evening we attended the house was half empty and we were using tickets purchased as a Christmas gift certificate (which at the time of purchase would cover the cost of two tickets, but when we went to the box office to redeem the certificate we found the gift amount would only cover one ticket).

It is a beautiful theater and we have felt privileged to have it in our locale. However, it is my opinion that the charge for tickets to any theater in the round should not be comparative to stage productions. The closing of Arlington Theater is a real loss to the community and I am hopeful that some enterprising production company will take over and try again — with reasonable pricing.

by DICK WEST

WASHINGTON — Does history really repeat itself? No.

Consider the Bicentennial events that were commemorated last week. Obviously they could not recur.

Let us move just one famous episode into a contemporary setting and see what would happen.

SUBJECT: Environmental Impact Statement.

FROM: Department of Revolutionary Ecology.

Introduction: This environmental impact statement is issued in compliance with the requirements of Section 102 (2)(c) of the Revolutionary Environmental Policy Act.

The proposed action involves the operation of a signal and warning system in and/or between the cities of Boston and Lexington and Concord.

Purposes and Objectives: The system is designed to transmit news of the departure of a British troop detachment that is being sent from Boston to Concord to destroy supplies and arrest Samuel Adams and John Hancock.

Personnel and Equipment: The proposed system entails the use of two lanterns, only one of which may be needed; one church steeple; one borrowed horse; one rider with strong lungs.

Methodology: Initial signs are to be transmitted by hanging one or more lanterns in the steeple of old North Church. Thereafter, messages will be disseminated across the countryside by vociferation of a midnight rider on horseback. No voice amplification apparatus required.

Environmental Evaluation: Project carries risk of three types of environmental or ecological disturbances of potentially deleterious nature.

1. Hanging lanterns in church steeple poses definite fire hazard to immediate surroundings and, by extension, through windborne sparks to adjacent structures.

2. Smoke emissions from lanterns, particularly if fueled by whale oil, could result in substantial deterioration of air quality index.

Additional pollution factors, both air and surface varieties, are anticipated in utilization of borrowed horse as transportation medium.

3. Sharp increase in noise level of countryside, caused by warning cries vociferated by midnight rider is projected to result in slumber interruptions in households in vicinity.

Alternatives: When major adverse impact is indicated, Revolutionary Environmental Policy Act requires consideration of whether alternate means of achieving objectives are available.

In this instance, alternative message transmission is available in form of carrier pigeons.

Recommendation: Forget the whole thing.

Orphans' peril

Our education system could reject them

by TOM TIEDE

WASHINGTON — The concept behind the Vietnamese baby, that of providing the children with a decent place in which to grow, may turn out to be hollow hyperbole for some of the tots. The fact of their being different, that is to say nonwhite and of another culture, may haunt them and even devastate some through at least their schooling years.

Difference in many U.S. schools is almost another word for risk. Even with children born in the nation, atypical backgrounds and behaviors tend to create problems and punishments far beyond that generated by the kids who fit in. Sad to say but millions of students in America are being treated out of the ordinary merely because they themselves are out of the ordinary.

The statistics on the matter are little known but blunt. According to the 1970 U.S. census, nearly two million school age children (7-17) were not enrolled in any class at the time of enumeration. That number, likely, could be culled by a similar count at any given time. And at that, it may be conservative: a study by the Boston based Children's Defense Fund, on surveys of 6,500 homes around the country, indicates that 5.4 per cent of kids questioned were out of school at the time polled.

Why? Mostly, says CDF, because the expendable kids are different. In a depressing summation of the situation, CDF reports: "If a child is nonwhite, or is white but not middle class, does not speak English, is poor, needs special help with seeing, hearing, walking, reading, adjusting, growing up, is pregnant or married, is not smart enough, or is too smart, then in many places school officials decide school is not the place for them."

Rochelle Beck of CDF says racial antagonisms probably account for some of the problem — black kids in some southern schools are expelled at a far greater rate than whites — but the bulk of the matter is more complex. CDF lists examples of kids out of school because they cannot afford fees for textbooks, because they do not have any means of transportation, because there are no special classes to accept the handicapped. One child, age 13, was expelled from school because he wet his pants and the principal decided this "difference" was a threat to order.

The desire for orderliness, as it happens, is apparently a primary reason for the exclusion of so many atypical kids from American classrooms. Much bureaucracy no doubt enters the equation, and in the case of gifted children there is usually just not enough tax money provided for facilities, but CDF believes that the simple efficiency too often is the real culprit. Needs are ignored for systems. Thus a pregnant girl is not kept away for reasons of morality (she may in fact be legally married) but because the authorities feel her presence will cause disruption.

The consequences of this American way of exclusionary education should be clear to all. Kids out of school are often kids out of control. The FBI reports school age delinquents account for at least one of every four crimes reported in the land. Beyond this, says a Washington educator, "We can't begin to measure the psychological harm done to school dropouts and pushouts. If a child can't hack it in school, even if it's only because he's different, he may see himself as a total flop and such scars go deep."

And thus the danger for the new young American citizens from Vietnam. Fortunately, most are being placed with middle and upper middle class families, so they will have some advantages other "different" kids do not. Still, many will retain accents, all will have almond eyes, and of course they will forever be thought of as Vietnamese souvenirs.

One can't help the premonition that, though America means well by the kids, some will grow up here outside of the main, outside of the opportunities, and outside of everlasting gratitude.

Maine schoolmaster 'encourages rebellion' while building character

by BOB GALLAS

Joe Gauld is downright cocky about the effectiveness of his Hyde School, a private institution that specializes in "building character" and caters to teenagers with problems.

But Gauld is perhaps the only school headmaster who backs up his cockiness — with a money-back guarantee.

Set in Bath, Maine, Gauld's school of about 200 boarding students now enrolls about 25 young people from the area, up from only one student a few years ago.

Gauld's personal philosophy is clearly reflected in the school, which encourages rebellion against the system, frankness, caring and discipline. His goal is to reach students that nobody has been able to reach before.

THE YEARLY tuition, a little over $4,000, is paid at the beginning of the year, but is refunded in full if the student is expelled or if parents are not completely satisfied with the results of the school's program. Scholarships to those with need are available.

A teacher and coach for 13 years in the public school system, Gauld said he "lost confidence in the system" in 1963 and has since been promoting his ideas on education. He tried to incorporate the ideas within the framework of an existing school but failed. In 1968, he founded Hyde School.

"The present system deals with academics only," Gauld said. "It's the philosophy of 'teach the kid how to think and the rest will take care of itself," he said.

"But character is larger than the ability to think," Gauld said. "We feel if you develop character, you'll also develop the ability to think."

GAULD'S APPROACH is centered around "community and commitment."

"Once you have community and commitment, the rest comes naturally," said Gauld.

The community is the school, housed in a mansion built by a former Maine shipping industrialist. Teachers and students live on campus. The students are integrally involved in running the institution, to the point where they decide which students will graduate.

The commitment comes from everybody, but mainly from the teachers "who are committed to the total development of the student, not just in that teacher's area of specialty," Gauld said.

"There are those types of teachers in high schools, but they are more committed to the management of the school," Gauld said. "Most teachers in high school only have one area of concern, their specialty. But to develop character, you must be totally involved in helping the individual."

"THINK BACK in your life and you can probably pick out two or three teachers who deeply affected you. Because you got a helluva teacher in drama, you might have decided on drama as a career, even though that's not where your ability lies," Gauld said.

The atmosphere at the school is "one where you let things out." "You tell your best friend you think he is phony. Honesty is important. You do it because you are committed to the development of that person," Gauld said.

Gauld said he prefers not to see a student's academic transcripts before he starts school at Hyde. Instead, the school conducts extensive interviews with both the student and parents "to see how they look at life and what the student wants to do at Hyde."

To Gauld, there is no such thing as a "problem child."

"The kids that are getting along fine in the system are the ones we think have problems," said Gauld.

SPORTS PLAY an integral part in the discipline at Hyde. All students are required to sign up for a sport, which occupies a great deal of after-school time.

Though the discipline is strict, differences, which Gauld describes as "unique potential," are respected and even encouraged.

"It's a healthy sign if the student openly rebels against the school," said Henry Milton, one of Hyde's teachers. "He's doing something real, genuine and honest. We'll do battle with that because we care," he said.

"Certain things you fight because of a bad attitude," said Earle "Bud" Warren, program director at the

HEADMASTER-FOUNDER of Hyde School, Joe Gauld is a friendly, articulate, persuasive man who has his own ideas about education — ideas that encourage rebellion, candor, caring and discipline in an effort to build character. Gauld recently visited with administrators of Northwest suburban districts.

school. "Other things you fight because you are different."

"We help the student distinguish between bad attitude and being different so he knows why he's fighting something," Warren said.

THE SCHOOL doesn't teach values.

"We help a kid develop his own values," said Warren. "We don't say things are right or wrong. We do say how we feel about something. We don't want to create rubber stamps."

"We're more concerned with the process, rather than the product," explained Milton. "If you make the right decision, but for the wrong reason, it's not the right decision."

Kim Cowern, Arlington Heights, a student at the school, admits she was taken aback when she first talked with students at Hyde. A frequent truant when at Hersey High School, Kim now admits to looking forward to her return to school after vacations.

Kim talked about her first tour of the school with a student guide.

"I asked about the rules, which were strict, and why they followed them. The girl who was giving me the tour said 'because they are community decisions.'"

Teachers — 22 for some 200 students — are often graduates of the school and are even more frequently husband and wife teaching teams who live there.

THE REQUIREMENTS for graduation are simple and aren't primarily concerned with academics. "If you receive a diploma from Hyde, you are capable of running your own life," Gauld said simply.

Graduates' degrees are based on how well they are prepared to run their own life and students help determine what degree a student will get. Many students who receive a lower degree elect to stay a year after graduation, to improve, or because they're just not ready to go on, Gauld said.

The school, accredited by the New England Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools, started with one student from the area a few years ago, and now has 25, a situation which has prompted Gauld to start hunting for a second site, possibly in this area of the Midwest.

GAULD OFTEN is on the road, sometimes accompanied by members of his staff, to tout his school at teas, organized by parents of Hyde students. But Gauld said he is promoting more than his school, he is promoting his form of education.

He hopes to someday change "the system."

"Twenty years from now I hope they'll look at Hyde School as being something very crude," said Gauld. "Just like we now look at the Wright Brothers' first airplane as being crude."

FIRM IN HIS ideas, Joe Gauld is a school headmaster who doesn't want to see student transcripts until after a student has enrolled in his school. Discouraged with "the system," Gauld broke away more than a decade ago and started his own private school for teen-agers with problems.

The doctor says

by Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Obesity and large veins

I'm 25. I first noticed enlarged veins in my left leg while pregnant with my second child. They disappeared following the birth. But now, a year later, they are noticeable again.

What preventive steps can be taken? Does diet and the amount or lack of exercise influence the veins? Can the enlarging process be halted at an early stage? What information is available on surgery?

If you stop and think about it you will observe that dilated veins occur in locations below the heart. That is why we have varicose veins, hemorrhoids and in men varicocele of the testicles. You don't see dilated veins in the head. The veins may dilate in the hands when you hold your hand down at your side, but they collapse if you hold your hand in front of your face. Try it and you'll see.

The big factor in causing veins to dilate is the pressure inside the vein. This pressure is increased by gravity. When you stand up the column of blood from your foot to your heart represents a miniature water tower, and the pressure in the veins at the level of the ankle is markedly increased. When you lie down the column of blood is literally turned on its side, and the pressure inside the vein is greatly decreased.

When the walls of the veins are thin or not supported well by surrounding structures it is easier for them to dilate. Those under the skin where you can see them most easily have the least external support and are often the first affected.

PREGNANCY increases pressure on the large veins in the lower abdomen. The pregnant uterus literally obstructs the normal flow of venous blood and is a form of a tourniquet on the veins. The increased pressure will often bring out varicose veins for the first time. If the veins are not too stretched there is a chance that after the pregnancy they will still have enough elasticity to return to near normal.

It follows that any constriction around the thigh or lower abdomen that interferes with the normal emptying of the veins increases pressure and contributes to varicose veins. I am completely against any constricting device on the lower abdomen (I do not mean support-type stocking or garments which may be helpful) because of the undesirable effects they have on veins.

Avoiding obesity, particularly abdominal obesity, does help, because abdominal obesity is another form of pressure. Regular exercise to maintain firm muscles provides some support for the deep veins inside the leg muscles and is important.

Unfortunately it remains true that once varicose veins have occurred there is little you can do to eliminate them, short of surgery. To see if you need or will benefit from surgery, you need some special tests of your veins. These tests also determine which veins can be improved by surgery.

'Some of them getting rich unjustly'

dresses in Skokie and later in Lake Zurich, reported annual candy sales of $3.2 million by National Youth Clubs of America before the Subcommittee on Children and Youth in March 1974. The state of Illinois later obtained an injunction barring further operation of the National Youth Clubs in the state and prohibited Friedman from selling distributorships. Friedman is under criminal indictment for mail fraud by the U.S. Attorney's office. He has been ordered to pay restitution of $50,000 for fraudulent activities in Wisconsin.

• The Chicago advertising firm of V. J. Geisler & Co. claimed 64 to 80 cents of every dollar contributed to the Asthmatic Children's Foundation in the years 1965 to 1973. According to testimony presented during the U.S. Subcommittee on Children and Youth hearings in February 1974, the foundation collected $814,000 during 1973. Of this amount, $377,000 or 71 per cent was paid to the Geisler firm. The promotions firm later changed its name.

• A fund-raising circus sponsored by the Combined Counties Police Assn. was held September 12-14, 1974 in Wheeling. The association, which maintains mailing addresses in Prospect Heights and Wheeling, hired promoter S. J. Kellner, Martinez, Calif., to run the George Matthews Great London Circus. Court documents indicate that 17 per cent of ticket sales receipts were channeled to the CCPA. The Illinois General Assembly contends that a greater share of the funds collected at a price of $7 per family ticket should go to the charity. The state is seeking information on the total amounts of funds collected at the circus. A temporary restraining order entered Jan. 16 that prevented Kellner from draining the charity bank account of approximately $10,000, has expired.

• The National Education Scholarship Foundation, formerly based in Northbrook, arranged for a number of high school bands throughout the nation to compete for scholarships supposedly to be offered through the foundation at a Vienna, Austria competition. The "chosen" bands, including Glenbrook South band from Glenview, shelled out an estimated $50,000 to $100,000 apiece to pay for travel and other expenses for the 1974 competition, Mulack said. In reality, "The scholarships were given from the parents themselves," he said. The state also discovered that travel agency fees were collected by the contest promoter and later required a reduction in charges to participants. In the interim, band members sponsored a number of fund raising events to foot the bill for the contest.

• Promoter Richard Dema maintains Tabcor Inc., offices at 500 E. Higgins Road, Elk Grove Village, and SMS Systems, Inc. office at 7541 W. Belmont, Chicago. Among his clients are Chicagoland Wheelchair Sports Inc., Illinois Amvets Service Foundation, Amvets Post 66, Wheeling, and several additional Amvets organizations.

A lawsuit filed April 25, 1974, in Cook County Circuit Court by Illinois Atty. Gen. William J. Scott charged that unlawful and unreasonable fees were charged in the promotion of the Seventh Annual Invitational National Wheelchair Basketball Tournament in April 1974 at George Williams College, Downers Grove. Defendants named in the suit were Tabcor Inc.; Coronet Producing Co. Inc., another Dema Enterprise; the nonprofit Chicagoland Wheelchair Sports Inc.; the nonprofit Illinois Amvets Service Foundation, and J. Richard Dema. Following an April 9 hearing on the case in County Circuit Court, Chicago, Judge F. Emmett Morrissey said a second hearing will be scheduled upon completion of discovery proceedings.

According to public record, Chicagoland Wheelchair Sports and Illinois Amvets Service Foundation entered into a contract that provided the foundation would sponsor the basketball tournament, and that the foundation would receive $1,000 from advance ticket sales. The record indicates that Coronet Producing Co. and Chicagoland Wheelchair Sports signed a contract that provided Coronet would produce the wheelchair tournament in return for 50 per cent of all advance ticket sales. Tabcor entered into a contract with the sports group to promote the event for a fee of 35 per cent of all advance ticket sales.

Chapter 23 section 5109C of the Illinois Revised Statutes states that no less than 75 per cent of all gross receipts collected by a professional fund raiser should be used for charitable purposes, after legitimate and reasonable expenses are deducted.

Demas declined to discuss the litigation. However, he said a distinction should be made between charity — a matter of survival — versus the "worthy cause," which he defines as "progress" oriented. Dema contends that he promotes and produces for worthy causes. Tabcor is registered in Illinois as a professional fund raiser with the Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations, however.

"Some of our sponsoring groups in some of their activities are thought to be charitable," Dema said. Dema's sales and marketing associate, Ralph Cronwell, 964 W. Villa Dr., Des Plaines, added that the "most people would rather not" have information about how their contribution to a worthy cause will be used. Dema said the public's right to know "should be balanced with the right to privacy."

THE PUBLIC'S right to disclosure of charity financial dealings is essential in the effort to weed out the fast-buck promoters that sap the public's cash and legitimate charities of their good name, contends Mulack. No one is suggesting that the public change its big-hearted attitude toward legitimate charities, he said.

The lack of educated giving is scored by Robert Dobritchinan of the Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "A charitable organization is something you don't question first," he said. "Later on, you may find that there are opportunists creating jobs for themselves."

State statutes require charitable organizations to file annual financial statements at Dobritchinan's office. Assuming that the report has been filed, potential donors may call the attorney general's office to determine whether litigation is pending against the group, and to request an examination of a charity's files.

DOBRTCHINAN WARNED that the financial reports are only one indicator of generally complex operations. "You can't tell on the surface whether it's legitimate or not," he said of the reports. A charity may fudge on the report of overhead costs compared to charity program expenditures, for example, or a fledgling charity may legitimately report that more than 30 per cent of its budget is earmarked for fund raising and administration costs.

The state traditionally stashed away the annual charity reports with no questions asked, Mulack said. Within the past two years, he said, the state has begun a crackdown on fly-by-night charity promoters whose stock in trade is fraudulent appeal related to law and order, youth and other causes. Mulack believes that public disclosure and prosecution will ultimately weed out shysters in the charitable and quasi-charitable businesses.

Uniform national legislation may be needed to protect children from continued exploitation by "Fagin operators" who use youngsters to peddle candy and cookies at inflated prices, under the guise of goodwill, Mulack said. As he testified in March 1974 before a Washington, D.C. hearing of the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on Children and Youth of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, "In summation, judging by the number of complaints and inquiries received by our office, we are aware of the great public demand for regulation in this area."

Guarantee better than guess

Oswald: "If you could guess right all the time, you wouldn't have to do anything else well to be a winner. Experts do a lot of successful guessing, but when possible they try to substitute certainty for guesswork."

Jim: "I'm looking at the hand you are about to bring up. I suppose South won the first trick with the ten of hearts and led a diamond."

Oswald: "He certainly did but only after a lot of agonizing. When dummy's queen held the trick he relaxed, remarked, 'I sure played the right suit' and went happily about the business of winning game and rubber."

Jim: "South's guess had some merit. If he had to lead a spade or diamond, the diamond was correct. There was a 68 per cent chance that the suit would break 3-2. If it did, it wouldn't really matter who had which ace, since three tricks in diamonds would be enough to guarantee success of the three notrump contract."

Oswald: "However, there was no need for any guess at all. Instead of studying diamonds and spades South should have led a club to dummy's ace at trick two and then led a small diamond from dummy."

Jim: "This play would guarantee

Working woman

A job that's fun

by BILLIE BACHUBER

"I can't wait to get to work!" Barbara Arnett likes her job so much she'd rather work than take off legal holidays, and she often puts in many more hours than required to earn her salary.

"I have fun earning my money," she explained her enthusiasm for her job as an apartment manager.

Hired fresh out of Southern Illinois University last June for a management training program by The Greens of Golf Mill, Barbara advanced to assistant manager in one month, property manager in three. She earns a straight salary with no overtime pay but gets "good raises" and free housing.

NOW MANAGING 38 buildings with 607 apartments, Barbara at first intended to be a teacher, then switched to public relations. Her degree is in communications. But she wanted a career that wouldn't tie her into a 9 to 5 day, one with lots of "people contact" and a job where she could make her own decisions. "I found it at The Greens," she said.

BARBARA ARNETT considers herself lucky to have a job that provides people contact, something she rates highly. She manages 38 buildings in The Greens of Golf Mill apartment complex in Des Plaines.

One of three property managers for The Greens complex, which includes 127 buildings with 2,056 apartments, 24-year-old Barbara now works with a staff that has five janitors, two maintenance men and a landscaper. The administrative personnel working directly with Barb are all women.

"THE RESIDENTS here are happy with our all-female staff. They report the women cooperative, understanding and patient," she said.

Keeping tenants happy and apartments occupied top the list of Barbara's job responsibilities. Her buildings are 94 per cent occupied and she's aiming for 96 in May.

Handling complaints promptly and courteously requires cooperation from maintenance men and janitors. At first Miss Arnett, because she is the youngest person on the staff, hesitated to enlist aid too forcibly. But she found the staff only too willing to help, she said.

Most complaints are for minor repairs that can be handled within 24 hours. "We try to remember that the apartment is that tenant's home."

NOW THAT many persons are being laid off or fired from their jobs, some can't pay their rent. How does she handle the situation when tenants fall behind?

"If a resident fails to pay his rent on time, we together set a date when payment is due. If the tenant doesn't meet that date, I am willing to talk again," Miss Arnett explained.

Then responsibility for collecting is no longer hers. Legal action is taken and tenants expect that to happen, she said.

When she's unable to satisfy a tenant, Barbara is upset, but for the most part, she finds her job rewarding and likes both earning money and saving some of it and also being self-supporting.

"NO WAY" does she see herself ever suffering the housewife syndrome should she and her steady boy friend marry. "I could never do just housework," said Barbara. Saving some of her salary is important to Barbara. A Prospect High graduate, she clerked at Wieboldt's while in high school and as a cocktail waitress in Carbondale. She had $800 in savings when she finished college.

Her first impulse when she got a steady job was to spend it, Barb confessed. "I wanted a sports car and all new furniture."

But she curbed that impulse in favor of saving for a future goal — maybe a trip, a home or some emergency. Now, just for the satisfaction of knowing it's in her savings account, Barb has set a goal of $3,000.

IN HER OFF hours (she works 8 to 5 weekdays and 8 until noon Saturdays) Miss Arnett hooks rugs, collects antiques and watches TV, her favorites being "Rhoda" — with whom she identifies — "Maude," "Good Times" and "M*A*S*H." She likes watching baseball and basketball games and swims every chance she gets.

Barbara also rides her bicycle and often accompanies her boy friend on his motorcycle when the weather's nice. On these excursions they often picnic. This past winter she learned to ski and "I love it," she said.

As a single working woman, Barbara values most a job she likes and earning enough money to be comfortable. Friends are important, too, she said, and she still sees some of her old Prospect High friends. They may visit her to talk over old times and they'll go out to McDonald's or Al's Olde Town Inn.

When and if she marries, Barbara doesn't expect that to change either her social life or her work.

As woman theologian reads it

Bible teaches sexual equality

by MONICA WILCH PERIN

If religion has been "the most iniquitous force" in the historical suppression of women, it was due to a misinterpretation of Scripture, a woman theologian told an audience here last week.

Nancy Hardesty, a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Chicago Divinity School, was a speaker at a seminar on women sponsored by Harper College last Thursday.

The program, which was held at the Sheraton Walden in Schaumburg, was presented by the Institute on Women Today, a national coalition of church-related women theologians, lawyers and psychologists who speak on these subjects as they relate to the women's movement.

WHILE CHURCH leaders and literature often declare that Scripture has assigned women subordinate roles, Miss Hardesty said, "we must not be locked into isolated little verses of the Bible. We must look at the whole Bible, and we must consider specific passages in their historical and cultural context."

Some Biblical passages, she said, addressed themselves to specific issues of the times, and it is necessary to consider how — or whether — they apply to people today. The wearing of veils by women is one example, she said, of a Biblical requirement that has been readily discarded by modern society, even conservative theologians.

Another problem in Biblical interpretation is the translation of the original languages. Miss Hardesty said the generic word for "person" in the Bible has in many cases been translated "man." Similarly, the name "Adam" in at least one verse of Genesis was meant as a generic term for human beings, she said.

"SCRIPTURE TEACHES unity and equality of the sexes," Miss Hardesty said, quoting the response of the man when woman was created: "Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh..."

"This unity is the image of God in us. The problem has been the male image we have had of God," which Miss Hardesty said has arisen from literature and art — "although most people are sophisticated enough not to believe that God really looks like the man with the flowing white beard on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel."

The trouble with these images, she said, is that "your God is too small." She pointed out that if such humanistic images are to be taken literally, then so, too, must other Biblical images of God such as a shepherd, a fortress, a tent and an eagle.

THE BIBLE ALSO presents motherhood images of God, Miss Hardesty said, pointing to the book of Isaiah: "I will cry out like a woman in travail..." "The House of Israel who has been born of me..." "As one whom his mother comforts so I will comfort you..."

Perhaps the most serious challenge to the male imagery, however, comes in the Ten Commandments.

"The second commandment says you shall have no images of God," Miss Hardesty observed. "It is important to recover this. God transcends all of our language about him, which is all metaphorical. Many of our images of God can become idolatrous. For example, the physical image of a male with a white beard — but we know God is not physical or bodily. He is a spirit. God is also not sexual. He does not have gender."

TACKLING THE story of the Fall of Man, which "is often blamed on women," Miss Hardesty termed it "a very straightforward story" in which "God said don't eat it, and Adam had no answer. Eve thought it over and made a decision. Meanwhile Adam did not come up with any objections."

But, Miss Hardesty emphasized that "both (Adam and Eve) sinned equally, and the result was a series of broken relationships: between God and Man, between the man and his wife, and between human beings and creation."

"Our goal is to reverse, not perpetuate, these results, to restore the relationship with God and with the world. We have been commanded to have dominion over the earth and to multiply, and that doesn't mean the man should have the dominion and the woman multiply."

NOTING THAT God said "it is not good for a person to be alone," Miss Hardesty emphasized the importance of partnership and cooperation between the sexes, and also among members of a sex, rather than rivalry and competition.

Discussing the Biblical role of wives, she said there is "no suggestion by God in the Bible that women should be subordinate," and she related the stories of several Biblical women to illustrate that their roles were not meek ones:

"The Jewish people are proud to be sons of Abraham, and rightly so, but the race really came out of Sarah. The 'virtuous wife' in Proverbs 31 was in the real estate business (she bought a vineyard), she wove and sold sheets, and she was a teacher. Lydia and Priscilla were career women of sorts. Deborah led the men into battle and was a prophet. Miriam helped Moses lead the Jews out of Egypt."

"Each of us has been given gifts by God that no one else has been given. I sometimes wonder if our punishment for not using our talents will be as harsh as the punishment given in the parable of the talents," Miss Hardesty said.

Suddenly her years are showing

It seems to happen all of a sudden.

As one of my friends explained her experience, she first noticed it one evening in a restaurant when she rested her chin on her hand.

"We were on a vacation, and I couldn't do anything about it until we got home," she told me. "Then I went to our family doctor and told him I was sure that thing under my chin was a tumor."

"Did he laugh?" I asked.

"No, he was very serious because he knew I was really worried. After examining it, he asked if my mother's chin were like that. I thought a minute and told him yes. The thing was, I didn't even notice that second chin GROWING!"

I SHOULD HAVE known it was coming. When I was about 14 and enamored of a boy in our neighborhood, my mother told me that if I wanted to know what this young man would look like at 40, I should look at his father.

Since even at that age I had come to realize that 40 was going to last longer than 14, I did look at his father. Of course, I was horrified by what I saw and translated into the future.

Not too many years later my father visited my husband and me where we were living in a warm climate. Since he had left a winter in progress, he was enjoying the mild weather tremendously. One day after an early morning swim, he was particularly exuberant.

"I feel so GOOD when I get up!" he exclaimed. "Then I look in the mirror and see my body — deteriorating all around me."

MORE RECENTLY it became harder to reject the idea that it was going to happen to me. One night while I was wallowing in wasted time watching an extremely dumb movie on TV, it became a bit more real. The leading character, made melancholy with the help of many Manhattans, said sadly, "I can't believe it. That's my sleeve, but that's my father's hand coming out of it."

It is amazing. When a baby is born, relatives gather around and evaluate its features. He or she has Father's nose and chin, Mother's eyes and hair, and cheek bones, skin and ears of assorted aging aunts and uncles. What no one admits is that at that moment, the newborn's body is his own, and it is at age 35 or so it undergoes a metamorphosis into the body of an older relative.

That is an interesting thought. And it is one that should keep me busy until my NEXT birthday.

Woman's Year emblem forged into jewelry

Everyone should be well aware by now that it is International Women's Year. The United Nations General Assembly, by adoption of Resolution 3010 on Dec. 18, 1972, designated 1975 as International Women's Year (IWY).

In observing the year, the world will hopefully become more aware of the role of women in the economy, their accomplishments in the professions, in government, in the arts and humanities and in their roles as wives and mothers.

In honor of International Women's Year, an official emblem has been chosen to illustrate the themes of IWY: Equality, Development and operating, but the calendar says it's that time of year again — time to think about a new swimsuit for summer.

To find a suit that flatters your figure and gives you a comfortable fit, you'll first want to know your figure type, study up on the new swimwear styles and then shop with care.

The following are suggestions for the women off on a swimwear shopping expedition.

• Maximize your figure assets, minimize the not-so-good features. For example, if you have a beautiful back, show it off with a suit cut low in the back — while you use swimsuit camouflage to make the least of any figure flaws.

• If you have short legs, look for a suit that is cut high. This same style suit does wonders for heavy thighs; try the bikini briefs that can be adjusted via ties at the sides. If you feel that your legs are too long and lanky, try trim shorts with a slightly longer leg.

• Midriff problem? Keep to a one-piece suit that isn't tightly fitted — a swimsuit might be a good bet. Dark colors and/or tiny prints can be flattering.

• If you're pear-shaped (The American woman's No. 1 figure problem), investigate the styles with bras and pants sold separately.

• If you're top heavy, you may also want to consider these swimwear separates. A swimsuit top with slight underwiring will give needed support.

• Be willing to experiment — perhaps you can wear a bikini or a mailer. You'll never know until you try on the swimsuit. Never buy without trying on first.

• Bend in the suit, stretch in it. Does it gape or bind? Does it feel truly comfortable? Check your appearance in a three-way mirror. If all aspects don't please, it's not the suit for you.

Protect your home while away: hire house-sitter

Dear Dorothy: Your advice about observing certain precautions in protecting a home while one is away is fine as far as it goes. But you seem unaware of the new service springing up in suburban areas called "house sitting." The best protection a house can have is that "lived in" look. Homes need more than just watching, considering what can go wrong — freezers going off because of power failures, plants to care for and animals that are better cared for at home than placed in a kennel. The professional house sitters are the answer. — Patricia Hersey

The idea is an excellent one. Through word-of-mouth recommendation, my brother hired a professional to come in every day, pick up the mail, water plants and so on. It worked fine. Many people are using friends who live in apartments and welcome the opportunity for a short-term change of scene. Some of it is a sad commentary on the state of society. But the fact is that very little is safe from thieves and marauders.

Dear Dorothy: I like to do a pot roast in foil but wish there was some way to get it brown. Do you know? — Marcia Whitcomb

Six-months checkup advised

Blood pressure affected by pill

by BRUCE E. HICKS

Women taking birth control pills should have their blood pressure checked every six months because of an increased chance of developing hypertension which causes heart attacks, according to a Dallas physician.

Dr. Norman Kaplan, professor of internal medicine at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical School, said only 1 per cent of women normally develop high blood pressure, but a study has shown that women taking oral contraceptives increase their chances by 2.6 times.

"There has also been an increase in the frequency of strokes in young women," Kaplan said. "It's not a tremendous number, but we're talking about young, healthy women not expected to develop a stroke."

KAPLAN, attending a conference on hypertension in Houston, said that 10 million women in the United States are taking the pill.

"It's the most popular because it's the most effective," he said. "But there's still a question of safety involved."

First, he said, doctors worried about blood clots developing in women's legs because of the pill, but that risk has been reduced. Now, it appears the pill somehow affects blood pressure.

Kaplan cited a five-year study of 46,000 women by England's Royal College of General Practitioners.

"In five years, a woman taking the pill has a 5 per cent chance of developing hypertension," he said. "That's 2.6 times higher than those not on the pill. And the longer they stay on the pill, the greater the chance of developing hypertension."

HE SAID BESIDES semiannual checkups, a woman should see her doctor immediately if she develops new and different headaches, dizziness or a bloody nose with no explanation.

Kaplan said the best method of birth control for older women who want no more children is permanent sterilization.

"For the college girl or young married woman putting off pregnancy, there's nothing wrong with the pill," he said. "If it's the most effective method of birth control, she should take the pill, but be aware of the problems."

"There is more danger from unwanted pregnancy, both physical and psychological, than from hypertension."

Recipe contest for club lunch

Members of the Woman's Club of Inverness are choosing favorite recipes for the annual spring luncheon at which prizes are given for most popular dishes by "taste and tell."

This year's luncheon is at noon Monday, May 5, at Buchler YMCA, Palatine. The clubwomen will be bringing a favorite — in appetizers, main dish salads or desserts — and after members and guests taste them all, winners will be named in each category. The winning recipes will also go into the club cookbook which will be ready for sale by summer.

THE LUNCHEON precedes the installation of officers for the coming year.

Special guests will be Emily Mulligan, the music scholarship recipient of the Inverness Woman's Club, and Jill Hungerford, the art award winner. Both students at Fremd High School, they were selected by department heads of the school.

Luncheon reservations should be made before Friday by calling 358-2043 or 359-3253.

Documentary on guns year's best

NEW YORK — The 11th Commandment for the United States seems to be: Thou Shalt Carry a Handgun. Today, some 40 million revolvers and automatics are owned by Americans.
And the rate is growing by 2.5 million a year.

On Sunday night, NBC News looked at some of the people who carry pistols in, "A Shooting Gallery Called America." Many of these gun owners carry their weapons for fun or for sports competition. To wit:

• "When I shoot a gun," says Bill,
15, "when I pull that trigger, I feel like
... I own the world, you know.
There's no way of stopping me."
• "He was a policeman," says another youth about his father who gave him his first gun, "and I decided to kill him," and I went into his room and put the barrel about four inches from his face, and then ... I just pulled the trigger ... like instant death, you know."

These are just some of the comments NBC's reporters gathered for this extraordinary 60-minute documentary. And, if they seemed startling, some of the film sequences were equally shocking: bank holdups, shootings and an autopsy, to name a few.

THERE ALSO WAS discussion of the inadequacies of the enforcement of gun laws and a plea by the powerful National Rifle Assn. to enforce existing gun laws rather than pass more stringent gun legislation.

Television in review

by Frank S. Swertlow

Some people may have been shocked or angered or frightened or dismayed. And one wonders how many Americans will actually buy a weapon after seeing this program.
Young toughs who kill for thrill or boredom may be too chilling. The nightmare of a film like "Death Wish" may come true. But maybe the tears of a mother, whose adopted son shot himself to death, moved some viewers to fight for stricter handgun controls or the proper training of users. Time will tell.

"A shooting Gallery Called America" is the best NBC documentary of the 1974-75 season, and it ranks with the best of its opposition — which is surprising for a network whose earlier efforts seemed like the sugar pops of broadcasting.

NEW STANDARDS of prime time television programming, including de-emphasis of sex and violence, will be instituted this fall by the nation's television networks, Federal Communications Commission Chairman Richard Wiley said recently.

Wiley said network leaders have agreed to "eliminate the excessive and gratuitous use of sex and violence on TV and will initiate this fall high standards during prime time programming."

He said the average 13-year-old has seen 13,000 murders on television.

Speaking at a news conference before addressing the Chicago Advertising Club, Wiley also said the government should interfere in broadcast journalism as little as possible.

He said broadcasters have the responsibility to tell all sides of a story, but otherwise are given wide discretion in their activities.

"Too much government intrusion does not produce more robust and controversial programming," he said.
"It becomes increasingly more bland."

Mahlig's vault takes Relays spotlight

ON THE WAY UP. Schaumburg's Bruce Mahlig explodes upward for a new Palatine Relays record in the pole vault Saturday. The Saxon senior shattered the old record by nearly two feet when he reached 15-6 1/2 for the second best effort in Illinois outdoor history...

Fremd team second in 43rd meet

The Palatine Relays belonged to Bruce Mahlig on Saturday — lock, stock and barrel.

The senior pole vaulter from Schaumburg High School drew the early crowds at Palatine with his incredible, record-setting vault of 15 feet, 6 1/2 inches. Mahlig's superb performance withstood the test of five hours' time and earned him the G. A. McElroy trophy for the most outstanding athlete of the meet.

The vaulting performance by Mahlig will be recorded as perhaps the most extraordinary individual feat in the 43-year history of the Palatine Relays. It shattered the old Relays mark of 13-10 set five years ago by Deerfield's Mark Nelson and gives Mahlig the second-highest outdoor vault in Illinois prep annals. Only Tim Johnson of Bloom went higher.

And despite the fact that Mahlig failed in three attempts at 16 feet — just barely — his effort couldn't be overshadowed, even by an impressive 99-point victory for Addison Trail and a strong runnerup bid by Fremd.

A combination of big-meet pressure, a brand new pole, and near-ideal conditions set the stage for Mahlig's defense of his 1974 Class B championship. The Saxon vaulter had cleared 12-11 1/2 last year.

This year the sky is the limit for Bruce.

"I was hoping to be able to go 15 feet consistently," said Mahlig, pulling on his sweats after the excitement died down. "But now, with this new pole — who knows? There's no telling what I can do. I believe!"

Mahlig had been concerned about the wind, which was gusting from the southwest, but by the time he was set to vault, the wind had shifted.

"It was a crosswind and that's no problem," said Mahlig, who came in at 11 feet after all the other vaulters were out. "And there were times when the wind died down."

The Schaumburg vaulter made only six attempts, clearing 14 feet, 15-0, and 15-6 1/2 on his first try at each height. The attempt at 15-0 was the closest. Mahlig grazed the bar on the way over, but it stayed in position.

Arlington girls rule badminton

by PAUL LOGAN

It was supposed to be a tense, dramatic finish, keeping Mid-Suburban Conference badminton fans in suspense to the end. They received such a show Saturday afternoon at Schaumburg High School.

Prospect and Arlington came into the two-day tourney just a point apart and that's almost the way they finished. Arlington, the defending champion, held off a stiff challenge by Coach Jean Walker's Prospect Knights to win the overall "F" two points, 67-65.

The Knights held a one-point lead over the Arlington Cardinals after Friday's afternoon round. After the semifinals, Arlington had three singles and two doubles alive with Prospect having one in singles and three in doubles. The meet champion was still in doubt.

When Mara Rautenberg pulled off the upset of the day in singles for Prospect, it appeared that a new team champion was in the offing. Rautenberg defeated Arlington's Mary Balnes in three sets 11-8, 7-11, 11-3. It was the first time Arlington coach Mary Lou Hundt could remember her star player had lost in four years of varsity competition.

Afterwards, Balnes said she thought she lost a match as a freshman, but her record going into this meet—be it one loss or two—had been impressive.

Jean Condon and Mary Flynn had won their second and third singles titles, respectively, for Arlington. Also, Prospect's first doubles team of Martha Hennemuth and Sue Tolzien had taken a title.

This left three doubles titles in doubt, including a very crucial one between Arlington and Prospect.

Sophomore Leslie Grabitz and freshman Lisa Pugsley came through at third doubles for Arlington, defeating Nancy Sauer and Lynn Johansen 15-7, 15-9.

That victory gave Arlington at least a tie for the championship. It was up to another underclassman duo — Arlington's Jody Lyon and Janet Haberkorn — to clinch the title. Again, Hundt's youngsters came through, defeating Hoffman Estates' Mary Hill and Terry McGlennan 15-8, 15-11.

There was also an exciting race for third-place honors with Schaumburg, Rolling Meadows and Hoffman Estates deadlocked at 41 points each. However, none of these teams had individual winners as Arlington and Prospect cornered the medal market.

This was how each individual title was determined:

First singles — Rautenberg over Palatine's Barb Pingel (11-2, 11-0), Schaumburg's Berna Hoehn (11-1, 11-0) and Arlington's Balnes (11-8, 7-11, 11-3).

Second singles — Condon over Elk Grove's Jean Alterio (11-0, 11-6), Prospect's Jean Hetzy (11-3, 11-1) and Schaumburg's Laurie Minarcik (11-5, 11-1).

Third singles — Flynn over Wheeling's Barb Wright (11-9, 11-4), Schaumburg's Jean Connell (11-1, 11-0) and Rolling Meadows' Pam Klein (8-11, 11-3, 11-1).

First doubles — Hennemuth-Tolzien over Conant's Lindsey Dietz-Marie Olson (15-4, 15-3), Schaumburg's Kathy Svoboda-Roseann Simon (15-4, 15-0), Wheeling's Linda Mendralla-Sandy Philip (15-12, 15-8) and Rolling Meadows' Thorsen-Glass (15-8, 15-4).

Second doubles — Lyon-Haberkorn over Forest View's Barb Bloomquist-Cathlo Carbonaro (15-8, 15-3), Elk Grove's Meyer-Murray (15-2, 15-5), Prospect's Cathy Strong-Rene Whitlo (15-12, 3-0) and Hoffman Estates' Hill-McGlennan (15-8, 15-11).

Third doubles — Grabitz-Pugsley over Rolling Meadows' Johnson-Johnson (15-2, 15-4), Forest View's Jill Jamison-Lynn Jurgens (15-11, 4-15, 5-1) and Prospect's Sauer-Johansen (15-7, 15-0).

Fourth doubles — Allseits-Young over Arlington's Kim Broderick-Marianne Hoy (5-3, 15-12), Forest View's Sue Arlomenko-Sue Carbonaro (15-13, 15-11) and Hersey's Corinne Frank-Jan Labellarte (15-5, 15-5).

Big 'E', Bullets dump Celts, 100-95

Elvin (the Big "E") Hayes scored six of his 34 points in a 10-0 spurt early in the fourth quarter to bring the Washington Bullets back for a 100-95 win over the Boston Celtics Sunday in the opening game of their NBA Eastern Conference championship series.

The Chicago Bulls were set to begin their Western Conference championship series last night against the Golden State Warriors in Oakland.

The Bullets, trailing by 12 points at the half, pulled to within three at 73-70 after three periods before jumping to an 80-73 edge at 2:16 of the final quarter of the nationally televised game.

Washington had scored six straight points to go ahead 76-73 when Boston coach Tom Heinsohn decided to rest Dave Cowens, even though the center had only two fouls. The all-star redhead scored 18 on his home court.

Hayes went right back to the basket and Phil Chenier scored another bucket around Cowens' replacement, Henry Finkel, and the Bullets took their win over the defending NBA champs.

Boston scored 10 of the next 14 points, four by Cowens who was hurried back into the lineup, to trail 84-83 midway through the period. But another hoop by Chenier, who finished with 24 points, and two by Nick Weatherspoon built the Bullets bulge back to seven at 90-83.

The teams traded baskets to the buzzer, the Bullets having outscored the Celtics 57-40 in the second half.

Washington jumped into the game in a 4:24 stretch at the start of the third period, outscoring the Celtics 13-2 to trail 57-56. A basket and two free throws by White restored Boston's margin to five points, 61-56, and the teams played even until the Bullets' fourth quarter outburst.

Aaron equals Ruth's RBI mark

Hammerin' Hank Aaron tied Babe Ruth's major league RBI record of 2,200 with a bases loaded two-run double in the seventh inning as the Milwaukee Brewers won the first game of a doubleheader over the Yankees, 7-0, in New York.

Yankee $3.7 million pitcher Jim "Catfish" Hunter was the second game hero with seven and two-third innings of no-hit baseball as the Yanks won, 10-1. Hunter ended with a three-hitter. A crowd of 41,493 watched.

Elsewhere, Oakland's Vida Blue became the first American League five-game winner as the Athletics beat California, 7-1.

A single by Mount Prospect's Dave Kingman started a six-run seventh inning as the New York Mets rallied to beat Montreal, 7-6, for their sixth straight win.

Dusty Baker slammed out four hits, including two run-scoring singles in a nine-run Atlanta eighth as the Braves beat San Diego, 12-8, in the first of two games.

And in other sports news...

A car driven by West Germany's Rolf Stommelen hurtled over a guard rail Sunday and into the crowd, killing four spectators and injuring a dozen more, at the Spanish Grand Prix auto race in Barcelona.

The race had nearly been cancelled after drivers protested the Montjuich Park roadway was unsafe. Stommelen, 30, suffered fractures in both legs, an arm and a rib...

Kaat wins 10th straight for Sox

Third baseman Bill Melton drove in two runs with singles, leading a 17-hit Chicago attack Sunday as the White Sox pounded the Kansas City Royals, 8-6.

Jim Kaat won his 10th straight game over a two-season span but needed relief help from Rich Gossage who took over in the seventh after Buck Martinez hit a two-run homer.

Gossage hasn't given a hit in his last five relief innings, preserving wins at Kansas City for Claude Osteen on Friday and Kaat, now 3-0, on Sunday.

Chicago scored two unearned runs in the first and added three more in the third on RBI singles by Ken Henderson, Melton and Bucky Dent.

Henderson and Carlos May opened the seventh with consecutive doubles for one run. Melton and Nyls Nyman capped a three-run inning with run-scoring singles.

Henderson and catcher Brian Downing had three hits apiece for Chicago. Melton and Jorge Orta got two each.

Harmon Killebrew belted his third homer for two Royal runs in the first inning. Bruce Dal Canton, whom Kaat beat last Tuesday in Chicago, was again the loser.

Geiberger wins in sudden-death

Al Geiberger, who went eight years between victories before he captured the Sahara Invitational last October, sank a 10-foot birdie putt on the first sudden-death hole to beat Gary Player in a playoff and win the $200,000 MONY Tournament of Champions on Sunday in Carlsbad, Calif.

Geiberger sank his putt on the par four, 360-yard 15th to pocket $40,000. Player, with eight career runner-up finishes in 11 playoffs, earned $23,700.

PGA champion Lee Trevino was third and Masters champ Jack Nicklaus ninth.

A visit to the Boston Marathon

What makes a person want to run 26 miles when the only reward is survival?

More specifically, why would the man next door risk his comfortable home, his family, and his job for an opportunity to run 26 miles and 385 yards through the hilly streets of Boston, Mass.?

Doesn't he know what befell the Greek warrior who raced from Marathon to Athens with news of a win over the invading Persians? The thrill of victory was too much for Phidippides, who collapsed in a heap at the finish line. Some say it was that last 385 yards that killed him.

Phidippides, the first marathon runner, was competing alone. He had no idea he was setting a record pace. He could have stopped off at Socrates' house for a cup of hemlock or two and he still would have had the record.

But the three Palatine men who were among the nearly 2,400 runners entered in last Monday's 70th annual Boston Marathon were tested right from the start. It was a battle just to see their feet touch the pavement.

Ron Sloan and Bob Sonneman, teachers at Palatine High School, and airline pilot Dave Clifford were taking up the Boston Marathon challenge for the first time. They flew into Boston with their running shoes and their pride and they returned to Palatine with a matching set of blisters.

And oh yes, their pride was intact.

"The Boston Marathon is a real ego trip for a runner who's been running for four or five years like I have," said 35-year-old Clifford.

"It's a great thrill to run and to finish," he continued. "It was a real boost to me. Here, in the midwest, we run and not too many people ever take notice. But there in Boston the people are lining the streets — maybe 50-deep — cheering us on, trying to shake hands, offering us fruit, water, beer, martinis."

Of course, Clifford was just another long distance runner in a sea of marathoners all striving for some kind of immortality. Just trying to find downtown Boston can be a challenge of a lifetime.

Clifford made it in two hours and 55 minutes — his best time ever — ahead of his Palatine cohorts and 724th overall.

"The hills got to me," said Clifford. "They talk about the hills being tough and they are. Heartbreak Hill got me. After that, I was running like a zombie."

Muscle spasms in his arches caused Clifford some unpleasantness after the race, but the medical crew on hand for such emergencies administered shots and then Clifford only had to worry about his dehydration.

"The ultimate trip for a runner is a marathon," said Sloan, who finished in three hours and nine minutes. "And the ultimate for a marathoner is Boston. I can't exactly say it's been a lifelong dream, but it was a dream fulfilled for me."

Because of his malfunctioning watch, Sloan ran 10 minutes ahead of the pace he had set for himself. He tried to recall the way he felt at the end.

"At first, I was surprised by my time and then I had a great feeling of relief — and a quiet pride that I had finished the famous Boston Marathon. I had a really strong sense of peace come over me. I've run marathons before, but I had never experienced the kind of calm I felt at the end. I felt almost isolated from my body."

But closely related to Sloan's psychic exhilaration was his physical condition.

"Toward the end you begin to lose your mental faculties," he said. "Physically I felt almost totally exhausted. I knew I would have a price to pay — and boy, I'm paying it now. I can hardly get down stairs. But I'll get over that."

Sloan and Sonneman had met Erich Segal on the flight to Boston. Segal — author, screenwriter and grizzled veteran of the Boston Marathon — had cautioned the Palatine runners about the course.

"He gave us the warning we had always heard," Sloan recalled. "Don't go out too fast. The first five or six miles are basically downhill so it's easy to let yourself go. I took the advice and held back. Later, I was passing a lot of people who were dying."

But neither Sloan, Clifford, nor Sonneman expected to win. Despite the fact that all three had qualified and had put in long, rigid, training hours for this race, they knew they had no chance of winning.

"They say that 95 per cent of the people running in the Boston Marathon are just running to finish it," said Clifford. "But the other five per cent are among the world's best marathon runners."

And this year's winner, Will Rodgers of Boston, finished more than 45 minutes ahead of Clifford, setting a new record.

The three Palatine men were in the Boston Marathon for their own purposes. They were proving something — to friends, maybe. To themselves. "A lot of people at school couldn't believe that I did this," said Sloan. "They couldn't believe that Ron Sloan actually went to Boston and did this thing."

"But I realized that an awful lot of people don't know what they want to do in life. I did what I wanted to do — I went to Boston and ran."

Mid-Suburban pitchers fire 2 more no-hitters

Keith Mallian

The Mid-Suburban League baseball was resumed on Saturday with pitchers rightfully earning the spotlight. Two no-hitters highlighted a heavy slate of makeup games as Arlington and Conant maintained their first-place perch in the North and South divisions, respectively.

It was the bottom of the seventh. Forest View pitcher Keith Mallian was getting a little tired. The pressure was intense. He needed to retire the side to post a no-hitter.

Although leading 5-0, an error and a walk put Hoffman runners on base. Then Hoffman's Joe Parille hammered a line drive which appeared destined to fall in for the first hit. However, Ron Turner didn't allow that to happen. The Falcon centerfielder made a diving catch to preserve the pitching gem and give Forest View a 5-0 victory.

That was the only ball hit out of the infield as Mallian struck out nine and walked just two. His teammates scored in the third — the only run he really needed — when Jim Petran singled in Craig Nelson, who had reached on a two-base error. Chris Hanson and Turner also had RBIs.

Petran, Neil Schmidt and Hanson finished with two hits each.

COMBO NO-HITS MUSTANGS

Dave Smithern came on in relief for Buffalo Grove Saturday, teaming with starter Tim Taigo to fire a no-hitter at Rolling Meadows on route to a 5-3 triumph.

It was the second no-hitter tossed at the Mustangs in less than a week. Last Tuesday they were subjected to a perfect pitching performance by George Savage and fell to Prospect 9-0.

In contrast Meadows had plenty of baserunners Saturday, collecting a total of seven walks through the first four frames. They carded five passes while battling around in the fourth inning and putting all three of their runs on the board.

Two free rides, a wild pitch and a sacrifice fly by Dave Bell produced one Mustang run. Then Taigo walked three more including Guy Tenuta with the bases loaded to bring in another tally and bring Smithern in from the bullpen to put down the uprising.

A third Rolling Meadows run came home when Paul Marsilio grounded out.

The Bison had done all their scoring earlier. A couple of errors and Mike Ledna's single put the hosts in command 2-0 in the second inning. In the third Tony Spinnelle reached on a miscue and pinch runner Rich Wilhelm scored on another bobble following Smithern's one-base rap.

One out later Dave Derrig walked and Ken Corchin reached on an error, leading the sacks. Mike Kelley then walked, forcing in Smithern and Don Saulte singled home Derrig.

Smithern struck out six over the last four innings and was credited with the victory. At the same time the guests had strong relief help from Bob Schmidt, who fanned six and allowed only two hits after coming on in the third to finish up.

FREMID BLANKS SCHAUMBURG

Fremid's Jim Recher and Schaumburg's Bob Connell hooked up in a classic pitchers' duel Saturday which wasn't decided until the top of the eighth when the Fremid Vikings erupted for a pair of runs and a 2-0 victory.

Connell, a junior righthander, had allowed just one base hit until the first extra inning when, with one out, Curt Field reached on an infield single and stole second.

After an error put runners at first and third, Fremid pulled a successful double steal for one run and Pat Gavilan placed a perfect squeeze bunt to earn a hit and an RBI.

Rocher, a senior righthander making his first start of the year, allowed just two hits while fanning nine Saxon batters. Rocher has evidently recovered from a shoulder injury which had shelved him through the early part of the season. It marked the second consecutive two-hit performance by a Viking hurler.

CONANT BOMBS ELK GROVE

Conant took out their frustrations on Elk Grove Saturday, rebounding from their first loss of the season with a 12-2 smacking of the Grenadiers.

The Cougars treated starting pitcher Rob Totten to five runs in the first inning and picked up five more in the top of the fourth to put the game away for good.

Totten worked just five innings, mowing down the Gren batters and retiring the first 12 men he faced. A pair of singles by Elk Grove's Ken Wajerski and Dave Milner and walks to Paul Gulliksen and Jim Maier in the fifth produced Elk Grove's only two runs.

Conant got the big run production from 10 singles and six Elk Grove errors.

Marty Luquet and Don Sibrava led the Cougars with two hits apiece.

Hinsdale records convincing win in tennis invite

by CHARLIE DICKINSON
Tennis Editor

Hinsdale Central won both singles competitions and one doubles, with the second still to be played, to post a convincing Arlington Invitational championship to their already overwhelming list of achievements this year.

The 17 team tournament unfolded at 8 a.m. Saturday and more than 13 hours later was terminated, with a few matches left to be decided, because of darkness.

The main point to be determined is whether Hinsdale's second doubles team of Bob Gray and Rich Gamboa can hold off Homewood-Flossmoor and complete a sweep for the rampaging Red Devils.

Ed Staren and Eric Umsted won the singles championships for the Hinsdale while Ted Staren and Randy Drux captured the first doubles title.

New Trier East, which placed second to the Red Devils with 11½ points, was led by first singles player Mark Schneider.

Schneider knocked off Hersey's Keith Rayner in the opening round 6-1, 6-2 and then pummeled Arlington's Paul Wei 6-1, 6-2. In the semifinal round against Deerfield's Robbie White, Schneider won on a tiebreaker in the second set but was injured and had to default the first singles championship match to Hinsdale's Staren.

Wei had advanced to his meeting with Schneider by blanking Palatine's Dana Morganroth 6-2, 6-0. After losing to Schneider he went to the consolation round and beat Prospect's Tom Fredericks 6-4, 6-2 and Homewood-Flossmoor's Mitch Simborg 6-0, 6-0 to advance to the fifth place final. It remains to be played.

Halas fires no-hitter; Lions push mark to 9-2

You can shake the magic wand and support offense all you want, but strong pitching remains the dominant trait of winning high school baseball teams. It always has been; there's little reason that should change.

And St. Viator, which has a penchant for hitting singles, is demonstrating they've got that strong pitching. It's the biggest reason Pat Mahoney's Lions are 9-2 total and 8-1 within the East Suburban Catholic Conference.

On Friday afternoon, senior righthander Tim Halas threw a no-hitter at Carmel, 4-0, for his second win against no defeats. Halas earlier beat Marist.

Then Saturday afternoon, senior lefthander Paul Kastner went the distance to shut out St. Francis deSales, 4-0, in a doubleheader opener.

Kastner came back in relief during the second game, replacing Mark Bonucchi after six innings, and tossed the final two frames of Viator's 6-5 win in eight.

Kastner's record is 5-1. The Lions have played 28 innings this spring and yielded 28 runs which translates to 2.51 runs-per-game, based on seven inning contests. But they're even better in conference play.

East Suburban Catholic teams have solved Viator hurlers for just 19 runs in 46 innings, or 2.07 per game, again based on seven innings.

In the second game, Bonucchi held Halas, from whom many victories are expected, may have finally discovered his winning formula against Carmel. He faced only 22 batters, struck out four, including the last man, and walked two.

Halas passed the first man he faced, then set Carmel down without a threat. He got an out, then walked the No. 2 batter of the second inning. That set up the game's finest defensive effort which came from left fielder Jim Kane.

A wild pitch sent the Carmel runner down to second. Then Kane snared a hard line drive in left and relayed to second base where Mike Dooley made the double play.

Viator played errorless ball behind Halas. The Lions scored three in the third plus one run in the fifth.

Bill Robin's right field double scored Pat Rooney who had singled and stolen second. After Pat Bucaro singled Robin to third, Dooley doubled to right field, scoring Robin and Bucaro for a 3-0 lead.

Rooney's fifth inning double and Mike Hermanson's infield hit preceded Robin's run-scoring fielder's choice. Carmel turned the play on Rooney who beat the tag at home.

On Saturday, Kastner struck out eight men and walked one during his distance 4-0 shutout over St. Francis. Nobody got past second base against Kastner. Viator scored three fourth inning runs plus one in the seventh. Rooney singled home one run and Jim Thompson sent across two more, also with a single, in the visitor's fourth at St. Francis. Walks to Kane and Hermanson plus Robin's sacrifice helped the inning.

Dooley's infield ground ball, erred at second base, produced Viator's seventh inning run when Bucaro scored.

In the second game, Bonucchi held a 5-3 lead, having struck out six batters while passing two, when Kastner replaced him in the seventh.

St. Francis tied the game against Kastner, 5-5, but eighth inning singles by Kastner, Bucaro, Kevin Mulroy and Mike Murray produced one run, all the Lions needed to win.

Kastner was stronger in the eighth and struck out the final two batters he faced.

Viator led, 2-0, but the game was also tied at 3-3 after five. The Lions jumped to 5-3 with a pair in the sixth.

Murray's second inning single scored Kastner and Bucaro who each stole a base to get into scoring position. That made it 2-0 but deSales solved Bonucchi for a single run in the fourth.

Dooley's bunt, Murray's sacrifice bunt and Bonucchi's RBI single gave Viator a temporary 3-1 lead as deSales tied the game after five.

Base hits from Hermanson, Kastner, Dooley and Murray, the last two producing runs, gave the Lions a 5-3 lead which Kastner couldn't hold for Bonucchi.

Glenbard South tops Jamboree; host entry impressive in weights

by ART MUGALIAN
Track and Field Editor

Two things never seem to change at the Mustang Jamboree Relays, held for the third straight year at Rolling Meadows High School last Saturday.

First, a different school captures the team title every year. That was taken care of when Glenbard South wrapped up the trophy with six relays victories Saturday, including a pair of record-setting performances in the mile relay (3:31.9) and the high jump relay (22.8).

The Glenbard South track squad totaled 48 points and showed more depth than runnerup Niles West (41) or also-rans West Aurora (38) and Elgin (31).

The other eternal truth at the Jamboree is that host Rolling Meadows always manages to take first place in the weight events. In the past two years, there was always a Bob Sloan or a John Sloan to put the shot or fling the discus farther than anyone else.

This year, the Mustangs have guys like Jim Evensen, Rich Huber, Dave Thompson, and Bob Newell. So they continued their domination of the weight events, setting a new Relays mark in the discus throw (537-4) by more than 70 feet.

Though the Mustangs finished a rather disappointing fifth with 27 points, coach Joe Vitton was pleased with the efforts of his burly crew of putters and throwers.

The aforementioned quartet piled up top credentials to bury the old discus record. Evensen reached 152-11, Nowell hit 137-10 and Thompson made 137-9. Huber, a sophomore, managed a 120-10.

The shot put relay team beat Barrington by more than nine feet, though the Mustangs were 13 feet short of the meet mark set in 1973 by an earlier gang of Meadows weightmen.

"We let down in some events like the sprint relays and the high jump," said Vitton after the meet. "But we still got some nice performances."

Greg Davis, the Mustangs' versatile jumper, set a new school record with a 40-7 triple jump, and Meadows' pole vaulter Mark Harris cleared 13-6 for his personal best outdoors. Teammate Jeff Ramas clocked a :14.9 in his leg of the 480-yard high hurdles. The Mustangs captured second-place points in the latter two events.

Vitton's crew also grabbed thirds in the high jump and the sprint medley, but the only other place they scored was in the two-mile relay, where they racked up a fifth.

Among the other outstanding field-event performances was a triple jump of 42-5 1/2 by Lake Park's Ken Mauer, helping his team to a fourth spot in the event. Barrington's Ron Zilkowski surpassed 50 feet in the shot put as the Broncos notched second there.

Eight records fell or were tied as Glenbard South upset defending champion Niles West. In addition to the record-setting marks by Glenbard, they tied a pole-vault mark of 46 feet and were victorious in three other events: the 440-relay (:44.9), the two-mile relay (8:17) and the sprint medley.

Niles West took firsts in the 480-yard highs with a record time of :64.4, in the 720-yard lows with another mark of 1:23.7, and in the triple jump at 163-3/4, another new record.

West Aurora won the four-mile relay (18:45.3) and the 880-yard relay in a record-breaking time of 1:32.1. Elgin picked up a lone victory in the long jump relay (78-5/4).

And Rolling Meadows won their traditional weight events.

FINAL STANDINGS: Glenbard South 48, Niles West 41, West Aurora 38, Elgin 31, Rolling Meadows 27, Barrington 16, Lake Park 14, Taft 9.

SPECTACULAR performances were common over the weekend at the Randhurst Twin Ice Arena as international figure skating stars joined Chicago Figure Skating Club performers in the "Stars on Ice Revue." Two of the highlights were performances by Wendy Burge (left), 1975 United States World Team member from California who ranked

Are Series rings in their future?

Chilly April thoughts about the October Classic and two who aspire for World Series rings...

Greg "The Bull" Luzinski wouldn't mind losing out on a home run championship if his Philadelphia Phillies could take the National League title.

And Paul Splittorff insists he doesn't care about winning 20 games again, not so long as his Kansas City Royals win an American League title.

There's never been a local athlete in the October Classic, that World Series of all baseball played only in North America.

It's the longest of long shots... But Prospect Heights' Luzinski and Arlington Heights' Splittorff might snap that streak in roughly five months.

Luzinski's Philadelphia Phillies, unless they stumble upon more Bad Medicine, should create headaches for St. Louis and defending champion Pittsburgh in the NL East. Not to forget those Wunnerful Cubbles.

Splittorff's Kansas City Royals, more than just a little peeved by their miserable stretch last season, vow they'll keep Oakland from a fifth consecutive American League West title.

Even then, Kansas City and Oakland could be looking up at the Texas Rangers. And because April is a month for bold thoughts, I like this World Series: Texas and St. Louis.

Luzinski and Splittorff were in Chicago last week. The Bull stroked six singles in 13 at-bats, drove home four runs and scored another as the Phillies dropped two-of-three games in Wrigley Field.

That left Philadelphia 6-7 which became 6-0 after Saturday's second straight loss to Pittsburgh. It's hardly representative of a pennant surge.

But Luzinski, now of Wilmington, N.J., is pounding baseballs at nearly a .320 clip and ranked among the National League home run leaders with four before Sunday's single game.

The Bull appears fully recovered from knee surgery which limited him to 85 games last season.

Splittorff's Royals lost one game last Tuesday afternoon in White Sox Park. Paul did not pitch here, but was a 3-2 loser Thursday evening in Oakland.

The defeat left Splittorff 1-2, both losses to Oakland, and owner of a 3.89 ERA. The victory was against Texas. His first start, versus California, was for no decision.

If Philadelphia and Kansas City are serious about league pennants, then Luzinski and Splittorff must be near the center of attention. If either fails, then the team probably does, also.

Both clubs talked division title last season, then fell way short of announced goals.

Phillie Phanfare meant third place, eight games behind the winning Pirates, one-half ahead of fourth place Montreal and just 80-82.

The Royals were even worse, plummeting from 1973's second place to fifth in the AL West. Kansas City lost 11 of its final 14 games to finish 77-85 and 13 behind Charlie Finley's Oakland Athletics.

Luzinski and Splittorff? Philadelphia's Bad Medicine was Luzinski's early torn knee ligament which sidelined him during June, July and August. He managed just seven HR's and 48 RBI's after slugging 29 and 97 the previous summer.

"We were eight games back," Luzinski said. "When you see yourself as capable of 30 home runs and driving in 100, those eight games could be made up right there."

A freak injury cut down The Bull. It was early June and the Phillies were hosting Atlanta. That is, the first place Phillies.

Luzinski ripped the knee ligaments while returning a foul ball. Surgeons rebuilt the knee. Luzinski didn't play again until September, then went the final weeks without a single home run.

Splittorff had a bad season and no excuses to offer for it. The 6-foot-3 southpaw lost his final seven starts to end 13-19 after a 20-11 mark in 1973 when the Royals were second behind Oakland.

"Seventh-three was a situation where everything I did went right," said Splittorff, now a Blue Springs, Mo., resident. "I was consistent and threw well for five and one-half months."

"Last year was just a complete turn-around. I couldn't throw well for more than two weeks at a time."

Nevertheless, Splittorff was a winning pitcher at 13-12 with three consecutive victories when August ended. "With a month left, it looked like 16 or 18 wins might be respectable," he remembered.

Then Kansas City lost its touch and like all the other Royals, Splittorff went down-the-chute. "We didn't hit, we didn't pitch and we didn't play any defense," he said.

"We fell out of the race in a week." Everybody forgets that we were only three games behind Oakland in August."

It's a whole new race now. But Philadelphia and Kansas City are virtually the same ballclubs... ones which weren't good enough to win last year.

The Phils obtained once effective relief pitcher Tug McGraw and outfielder Don Hahn from the New York Mets for center fielder Del Unser who's now a .400 hitter.

They planned on a healthy Luzinski and for third baseman Mike Schmidt to approach his 38 HRs plus 116 RBIs of last season.

Kansas City (and many others) lost to New York's Yanks in bidding for ex-Oakland pitcher Jim "Catfish" Hunter. So they settled for designated hitter Harmon Killebrew of Minnesota.

Philadelphia and Kansas City in a World Series? I doubt it. Certainly not both. Maybe Philadelphia. A healthy Luzinski will make a noticeable difference.

The Bull could overcome teammate Schmidt for the major league home run crown although he insists, "It's not really that important."

Kansas City needs the Splittorff of 1973 who won 20 games. If last year's Splittorff duplicates a similar season, then he's probably trade bait.

But as Splittorff says, "Whatever it takes to win the division will make me happy. That's the only goal."

Maine loses, 5-4

After leading off the season with a win over Glenbrook South, the Maine West girls' softball team lost to Niles North Wednesday 5-4, at the winner's field. The junior varsity also lost 4-2.

Karen Gaflick led the Maine team with two singles in four tries. Debbie Carlstrom, Kris Tosterud, Ruth Bernick and Laurie Melssner had singles.

Six errors hurt the Warriors' chances as Niles only had just two hits off Nancy Habbott, who struck out seven and walked seven.

The score was tied for the three innings until the fourth when Maine West scored twice to take the lead. Niles tied the score on an error in the fifth and won the game in the last of the seventh on two errors.

Arlington records 10-0 victory

A Herald staff report

The weather cleared Friday, allowing a half dozen Mid-Suburban League games to be played. Arlington continued to dominate the North Division in baseball with a convincing win over Wheeling.

Also victorious were Hoffman Estates over the previously unbeaten Conant, Fremd over Palatine, Buffalo Grove over Hersey, Rolling Meadows over Schaumburg and Elk Grove over Forest View.

CARDINALS ROLL ON

Brett Frase and John Vukovich clubbed out three hits apiece and sophomore John Mertins fashioned a six-hit shutout as Arlington stormed past visiting Wheeling Friday, 10-0.

The Cardinals rapped three Wildcat pitchers for a total of 13 hits and scored in every inning except one while chalking up their fifth straight triumph without a loss this season. Mertins, meanwhile, walked four and struck out three for the win.

His teammates spotted the young hurler to a 1-0 lead in the first on singles by Jim Vogts, Jerry DeSimone and Dar Townsend and then jumped on "Cat" starter Mike Brzuszczyk for four more in the second to put the contest out of reach.

Frase opened the second inning assault by getting hit by a pitch. A single by Vukovich and a walk to Don Stobbs then loaded the bases and subsequent walks to Mertins and Mike Mayerck made it 3-0. Two more runs came in on ground outs.

In the third Mertins helped his own cause again by doubling after Stobbs had reached on a fielder's choice and stole second. Frase blasted a double and Mayerck and DeSimone provided RBI singles during a three-run outburst in the fifth and base hits by Frase and Vukovich keyed a final Card score in the sixth.

The loss was Wheeling's second in four games this spring.

HOFFMAN NIPS CONANT

Several players once attended Conant High School, giving them some incentive as Hoffman Estates players in this first varsity battle between the two schools.

Hosting Hoffman pushed across a run in the first inning and made it hold up in defeating the previously undefeated and arch-rival Cougars, 1-0.

The Hawks of Coach Gary Kraft staged their one-run uprising after a double by Rick Lindow and a single by Joe Parille. The latter's hit took a strange hop over the shortstop's glove with the outfielder misplaying it. Lindow scored on that error.

Ray Gawron tossed a two-hitter for the winners, striking out three and walking four. Conant's Bill Anderson two-hit Hoffman, fanning four and walking 2.

FREMID TOPS PALATINE

When two arch-rival teams meet, the outcome of a game usually goes down to the final inning. Fremd pitcher Scott Orbin, who tossed a two-hitter, needed a super catch by left fielder Jim VanMeter to preserve the 2-0 victory in the seventh inning.

VanMeter caught one over his shoulder just short of the fence with a man on base. Palatine's Jim Herbst singled after that, but Orbin pitched out of that jam for the victory. Rob Hughes was the losing pitcher.

Palatine scored both its runs in the second. VanMeter doubled and scored after two wild pitches. Pat Gavigan walked, stole second and scored on an error.

BISON TOP HUSKIES

Rick Brinsmade fashioned a nifty three-hitter and his teammates stole seven bases to provide the measure of difference in a 3-0 Buffalo Grove triumph over visiting Hersey Friday.

Brinsmade coaxed a no-hitter along until Gary Hart singled off him in the sixth inning. Hart, meanwhile, was going the distance on the mound for the Huskies and also hurling a three hitter but the hosts were able to make the most of base thefts and four Hersey miscues.

Mike Ledna reached on a fielder's choice in the bottom of the first, stole second and continued right on it to score on an overthrow. The Grove lead stayed at 1-0 until the fourth when Dave Smithern walked and raced home on Dave Derrig's three-base blast to center.

Derrig then scored on an error to make it 3-0. Ken Corchin subsequently walked, stole second and came in on Mike Kelley's single.

For good measure the Bison added a final tally in the sixth, Mark Dentler walking, stealing both second and third, and coming in on Corchin's sacrifice fly.

Brinsmade and Hart both fanned six. The setback left the Huskies owning a 2-4 Mid-Suburban League mark.

MUSTANGS BLANK SAXONS

Little righthander John Igrasek twirled a nifty two-hitter, walking none and striking out 12 as Rolling Meadows trumped Schaumburg, 3-0.

Igrasek was in complete command, throwing just 84 pitches and mixing a moving fastball with an off-speed curve. His teammates also backed him with errorless defense.

The Mustangs only got three hits themselves, but control trouble by Schaumburg hurler Ray Fairbanks provided Meadows with their offense.

The winners tallied twice in the third on walks to Paul Marsillo, Mike Bramlett, an error to fill the bases and RBI walks to Steve Breitbeil and Dave Bell. Meadows added another in the fourth when Guy Tenuta doubled to right, Igrasek beat out a bunt single and Marsillo and Bramlett each drew passes.

Arlington's Todd Van Gorp lost to John Dowdall in the first round and then to Mike Solow of Flossmoor in the second.

Arlington's experiment at first doubles, pitting John Yeazel and John Wallner together, had mild success.

Yeazel and Wallner whipped past Bloom's entrant 6-3, 6-0 and then ran smack into Staren and Druz from Hinsdale. When the dust had lifted Hinsdale moved into the semi-finals 6-1, 6-2 and Arlington's duo was matched with Prospect's Dave Hughes and Gary Thomas in the consolation.

Arlington moved past them 6-3, 6-3 but lost to Evanston.

Luke Weeg and Pete Burkhart carried the colors for Arlington in the second doubles and advanced past Ottawa in the first round 6-2, 7-5 before dropping to Flossmoor's team 6-4, 6-4.

In the consolation round Arlington dumped Bloom 6-2, 6-4, then after losing to New Trier East won the seventh place match against Prospect by default.

With the meet still to be completed Barrington, Deerfield and Aurora West are tied with seven 1/2 points while Homewood-Flossmoor has seven and Arlington six 1/2.

fect effort. "It felt just great — I flew over the bar," the tall Saxon vaulter said later. "It was a perfect jump, that's what it was."

Mahlig's first vault at 16 feet was a strong one, but he mislaid the crossbar after having seemingly passed over it. "I don't know where I hit it," said Mahlig, who had never before attempted 16 feet.

Mahlig's sensational performance was followed by a valiant effort from the trackmen of Fremd, who managed six first places and 88 points for second spot in the team standings. Chicago Phillips was third (48) and Schaumburg and Conant tied for fourth with 36 points each.

Coach Pat Brogan's Fremd outfit got strong running performances from miler Paul Klayon (4:27.8), two-miler John Filosa (9:42.7) and Wil Fieldhouse, who battled the obstacles to win the new steeplechase event in 10:09.6.

Other winners for the Vikings were shotputter Rich Sharpe (55-4), long jumper Lawson England (20-7 1/4), and the 320-yard high hurdle shuttle team of Jim Borneman, Dan Mosby, Gary Gunderson and Sam Benevides.

Fieldhouse led nearly the whole way in the 3,000-metre steeplechase as he negotiated the hurdles and the water pit flawlessly and in near-perfect form. It wasn't the case for some runners, many of whom took tumbles into the chilly water.

Sharpe needed his last put to surpass Addison Trail's John Gerhardt in the finals of the shot. The Viking trailed his foe by one-half inch almost from the beginning of the prelims, but came on to successfully defend his Class A title. Schaumburg's Dave Wodek was third.

England, meanwhile, upset a strong field of long jumpers by popping his best effort of the season.

"I guess I'm surprised that 20-7 won it," said England's coach. "But I'm not surprised about Lawson's jump. He always seems to come on toward the end of the season."

Other local winners were Schaumburg's Scott Mielko with a 6-2 high jump and Conant's frosh-soph distance medley team of Mike Walston, Tony Stompanato, Carmen Zepeda, and Brian Foss.

Mielko failed in his attempt to set a new Relays record of 6-5 1/2, despite a strong effort on his second try. The Saxon junior was defending his 1974 Class B Relays title.

Addison Trail's victory came on the strength of three first places and five seconds. The Blazers took points in 11 events, as did Fremd, but the runner-up Vikings grabbed no seconds and just two thirds.

Palatine finished seventh with 23 points on the strength of a second in the frosh-soph medley, a third-place tie in the 400-yard low hurdle shuttle, a fourth in the steeplechase by Dave Horwath, and a fifth-place clocking in the mile by Jim Shaffer.

Conant got a pair of third-place performances by distance specialist Mark Kaufman in the two-mile and the steeplechase, and thirds from pole vaulter Fred Niloff and discus thrower Rick Behringer.

Hoffman Estates tied for ninth with

Buffalo Grove's Larry Smolinsky scored for the second straight year by taking a fourth in the discus. (Track summary in Tuesday's Herald)

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "... if it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Greiman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Netsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.
- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

• Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

City to become one of first to recycle motor oil

Des Plaines' recycling program will take on a new phase Saturday when the city becomes the first of three suburban communities to begin recycling motor oil.

Philip Lindahl, city environmental officer, said Illinois and Des Plaines officials will mark the start of the oil-recycling program at 10 a.m. at the city's recycling center on Oakton Street.

Lindahl said researchers have estimated that a statewide recycling program could save up to 16 million gallons of oil per year in Illinois.

Besides Des Plaines, Glen Ellyn and Naperville also will establish oil recycling centers in May.

LINDAHL SAID the pilot program in the three communities will be closely studied to determine the effect a statewide program would have on easing the energy crisis.

Ernest Dunwoody, assistant to the state's energy coordinator, is expected to help local officials launch the program Saturday.

City officials indicated that plans are still being worked out for other communities to participate in the Des Plaines program. It is possible that other pilot programs could be established in the area. Lindahl said both Hoffman Estates and Arlington Heights have expressed an interest in recycling oil.

The Des Plaines recycling center will have a special container for oil.

LINDAHL SAID the center will be open from 4 to 8 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Saturdays and from 1 to 6 p.m. Sundays.

The Des Plaines phase of the program will be monitored by students from Oakton Community College in an effort to gather data on impact of the project. Students from North Central College and College of DuPage will keep track of the program at the Naperville and Glen Ellyn recycling centers.

The Des Plaines recycling center already accepts newspapers, glass and cans.

Casey may bat for Mudville—but Susie's the pitcher

by STEVE BROWN

Don't be surprised if a few pigtails stick out under the baseball caps on Little League players around Des Plaines this summer.

Little League is no longer a bastion of male supremacy. Girls have picked up some balls and bats and have joined the teams.

So far, five girls have been drafted to play on teams in the five Little League associations in Des Plaines.

IT REPRESENTS a far different story than in years past when national Little League officials went into court to limit the "national pastime" to boys.

The girls, Donna Logisz, Jean Tookey, Joy Robackowski, Lee Fuchs and Chelly Corr, aren't making a big deal about gaining a spot on the Des Plaines teams.

"I just like playing baseball," Joy said.

The 11-year-old, who will be playing in the Devon-Higgins League, said she

Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN
First of a series

Charity is big business in the North-west suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-a-thon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herald survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 20.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

• Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Bianco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $85.

• Irwin Horwitz, 9210 Church St., Des Plaines, is a 12-year-old former salesman for the National Youth Clubs of America Inc. Together with his friend Edward Rosenberg of Des Plaines, Horwitz joined a team of youthful door-to-door candy sales people in the north suburbs in September 1973. He dropped out of the group following a dispute with a team leader.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. I'm poor and I want to get money to go to Disneyland. I need to sell 500 boxes of candy and I've sold 492 boxes. Would you buy one?'" The youth's commission on the sale of a $1.75 box of candy was a quarter, "and if you're the best seller of the day you get an extra dollar," Horwitz said. The "big guy in the organization" was Morris Friedman, he said.

Friedman, who listed business ad-

2 shop centers underassessed, teachers charge

by JOE FRANZ

A coalition of north suburban teachers charged Sunday that two suburban shopping centers are underassessed by about $17 million, resulting in an annual loss of about $1.4 million in tax revenue to schools.

The North Suburban Unified Bargaining Council charged that County Assessor Thomas Tully has underassessed the Old Orchard shopping center, Skokie, and the Deerbrook Mall shopping center, Deerfield.

The NSUBC said Old Orchard is underassessed by more than $13.6 million, resulting in an annual tax loss of $1.13 million. The group alleges that Deerbrook is underassessed by more than $3.5 million, resulting in a yearly tax loss of $320,000.

THE NSUBC includes teachers from Des Plaines Dist. 62, but the alleged underassessments of the two shopping centers would not affect school taxes in the Des Plaines area.

The charges were made at a press conference at the Sheraton-Chicago Hotel.

"We have discovered through our research that some of the biggest shopping centers in the north suburbs are owned by big real estate developers from Chicago who have heavy political connections with Tom Tully," said Claire Hyman, spokeswoman for the NSUBC.

She said the group will release information Thursday on six other shopping centers it says are substantially underassessed.

"These developers have secured tax breaks that are cheating our schools of hundreds of thousands, even millions of dollars," she said.

THE LOSS IN revenue due to the underassessments, Miss Hyman said, places an unfair financial burden on taxpayers in the school districts where the shopping centers are located.

She said the loss in tax revenue also has resulted in low pay for teachers in most elementary school districts in the area. "One way to help the problem is to get the large developments to pay their fair share of taxes," she said.

Miss Hyman said her group has not attempted to talk with Tully about the alleged underassessments of the shopping centers. "We would be interested in talking with Mr. Tully about this tax cheating," she said.

Elk Grove schools alter tornado-watch system

It's tornado season and the watch is on in Elk Grove Township Dist. 59.

After confusion during a tornado warning last year, the school district has changed its tornado watch and warning procedures.

One of the major changes is using the Elk Grove Village Civil Defense system. Last year the district used the Arlington Heights Civil Defense area-wide system, but found that warnings usually were sounded in Elk Grove Village, in the southwest section of the district, before being sounded in Arlington Heights.

BECAUSE TORNADOS usually travel from the southwest to the northeast, the district decided to change to the Elk Grove Village system.

"The situation we had a year ago provided an excellent learning situation," said Arthur Perry, assistant superintendent in charge of administrative services. Last year a warning was sounded in April when school was being dismissed and when all principals were out of their buildings at a district meeting.

To add to the confusion, the Elk Grove Village schools heard the Civil Defense warning on the streets but were not receiving any information about a tornado sighting from the Arlington Heights Civil Defense because of the distance and location involved.

"The probability of those three circumstances happening at once are one in a million," said Perry. "We have since made some decided improvements."

If a tornado watch is given over the Civil Defense monitoring system, all teachers are informed through the principal or the person in charge in his absence. A watch means weather conditions exist for tornados.

IF A TORNADO warning is sounded, regular classes are stopped and students are moved to the safest place in the building.

If a warning is sounded at dismissal time, no students will be dismissed unless a parent arrives to take the student or until the all clear is sounded. Students on buses headed home at the time of the warning will be taken to the nearest safe building and kept there until the all clear is sounded.

Perry said parents should be aware of this policy for dismissal time warnings because students will not be arriving home on time but will be kept in a safe place.

"We want parents to understand that when a tornado warning is sounded, everything stops," he said.

Rick Hearle, Mike Herriges and Jeff Waddell were welcomed into Webelos.

All the boys participated in relay races for the evening activity.

Saturday the boys will go by bus to the Milwaukee Road shops and bumpy yard in Bensenville. The next pack meeting will be at 7:15 p.m. May 18 at Cumberland School.

Girls 'invading' Little League

learned to play baseball with a number of boys in the neighborhood.

THAT APPEARS to be a common denominator among the girls drafted onto the various squads.

The girls are somewhat reluctant to predict how they will fare this summer, but if the tryouts are any factor they should do all right.

Donna was the first pick in the draft of 43 players to round out the ranks of the 13-team league. She will be playing with the American Legion team in the South Side Little League Assn.

"I don't expect any problems with the boys," Donna said, adding that she had been playing baseball with boys in the area for some time.

THE GIRLS' parents have no objections to their daughters' being one of the guys.

"I was concerned at first with throwing her into the constant companionship of boys, but I don't think it will do any harm," Florence Logisz said, saying her daughter is a pretty good ballplayer.

The girls don't attribute their breakthrough to the women's liberation movement.

"The boys have been her buddies and Jay said she was only trying out because she liked to play," Mrs. F. Robackowski said.

Coaches and managers are looking forward to this new wrinkle in the baseball program.

"We don't know how everything will go, but we think some of the girls will be among our better players," one coach said.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Bufford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animals members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $15 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sale said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

SANDRA KEENEY holds some of the kittens Aid to Animals hopes to place in good homes. The roster of adoptable pets in the Palatine Township foster home usually includes 30 dogs and several cats.

home can be found and works closely with the Evanston Pound, running an adoption program at the pound every Saturday and Sunday from noon to 3 p.m.

The Aid to Animals roster of adoptable animals normally has at least 30 dogs on it and several cats. None of the animals are put up for adoption until they are in good health and have an agreeable temperament.

"You never get used to giving up an animal," Mrs. Keeney said. "When you take something into your house that has been badly abused and build up its temperament and health, you get used to it."

"In Susie's case it's a lot like a child because she is so affectionate," she said. "The only thing that makes it worth while is knowing that it will go to a good

River Trails sets summer school

River Trails Dist. 26 will sponsor a five-week summer school program June 30-July 31 for children in kindergarten through eighth grade.

Classes will be held each weekday except July 4 from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. at Parkview School, 805 Burning Bush Ln., and River Trails Junior High, 1000 Wolf Rd., both in Mount Prospect. Summer school director Judy Peterson said class locations will be determined after registration is completed.

Classes will include remedial, enrichment and general offerings. Classes will be taught in reading, math, language arts, science, social studies, home economics, typing, art and physical education. In addition, new classes for the learning disabled and classes in art and creative dramatics for kindergarten, inquiry into science, clay art, sewing, music and Spanish will be offered.

During the summer session, the music and drama classes will sponsor performances, an open house will be held, and a final activity day will be planned for all students.

Each student may take two courses during the summer session. The cost is $7.50 for materials and $5 for optional bus transportation. Students taking only one course must pay $25 for the summer session because the state will not reimburse the school district for part-time students.

Registration can be sent by mail to Parkview School no later than May 16. Registration may be made in person at the Dist. 26 office, 1900 E. Kensington Rd., Mount Prospect, May 14-17.

Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN
First of a series

Charity is big business in the North-west suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-a-thon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Bianco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $85.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. ## Village building director to be named May 5

by LUISA GINETTI

Wheeling Village Mgr. George Passolt said he will name a building director as soon as the newly elected village board assumes office May 5.

Passolt said he has had someone in mind for the job "for some time" but decided to wait until after the new board is seated to announce his choice.

Passolt declined to name the person.

"I've decided as a courtesy to the board to wait until the new trustees take office to name the building director," Passolt said. "I don't have to do that because I do have the right to hire and fire but I've always followed this policy in the past with the board."

Passolt said he has interviewed "quite a few people" during the past 14 months while the job has been vacant.

ROBERT KAWINSKI, village electrical engineer, has been serving as acting building director since February 1974, when William Bieher resigned after pleading guilty to federal charges of extortion, conspiracy to commit extortion, perjury and filing a false income-tax return.

Passolt said Kaminski has done "an outstanding job" during the time he has served as acting building director. Kaminski will assume his former duties when a new building director is named.

Applicants for the post have included plan commission chairman Herbert Lortz, electrical commissioner A. M. Mansukhani and a plan reviewer for the Village of Northbrook, Walter Repholz.

Repholz said he has applied for the post and been interviewed but has received no word from the village or Passolt that he has been selected.

Repholz has worked in the Northbrook plan department for more than a year, he said. Previous to his job in Northbrook, Repholz worked for the City of Highland Park.

THE VILLAGE still is searching for a prosecutor to replace Donald Norman, who resigned last July. Norman is the Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman.

The prosecutor represents the village in court on local ordinance violations and minor traffic cases.

Passolt has said he has interviewed candidates for the prosecutor's post but as yet no decision on a successor to Norman has been made.

Norman has been serving as acting prosecutor until his replacement is named.

Palwaukee-noise talks next week

Officials from the Federal Aviation Administration will meet next week with the Wheeling Environmental Commission to discuss noise-control measures taken at Palwaukee Airport.

At Read, an FAA official, said the May 7 session was requested to provide an opportunity for federal officials to explain the noise-control program. Read said FAA officials also are interested in hearing from village officials on steps they believe should be taken to better control noise at the airport.

Read said the FAA began instituting new noise control procedures at Palwaukee in February even though the federal agency has worked at regulating noise problems there since the 1960s.

HIE SAID NEW arrival and departure procedures regarding altitude requirements are among the new procedures in effect at Palwaukee to eliminate noise problems.

Read said Runway 34, the nearest runway to the Wheeling residential area, has new flight takeoff procedures which require a left turn shortly after takeoff to avoid the residential section as much as possible.

Traffic patterns at the airport also are being monitored to determine what other procedures can be taken to curb noise at the airport, Read said.

He said the FAA also is planning to conduct a noise study of the airport in the near future as part of its noise-control program at Palwaukee.

"We'd like this to be a give and take session and get feedback from the village on what else they think we can do to control the noise problem at Palwaukee," Read said.

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries. The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "... If it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-8th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Grelman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Grieman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Netsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

- Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

Schools approve 3 new jobs for administration

The Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21 Board of Education has approved a reorganization of the district's administration, adding three positions.

The positions of administrative assistant for special services and administrative assistant for staff/community relations, now held by R. Steven Stavrakas and Richard Wynn, have been eliminated in the reorganization, said Supt. Kenneth Gill. The two men will be reassigned to other district positions, Gill said, although plans are indefinite.

Their responsibilities will be primarily divided between two new assistant superintendents for support services and administration. A social studies coordinator also will be added to the staff. Administration changes will take effect July 1.

GILL SAID HE would like to fill the ### Student to spend summer in Sweden

David Yelzer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Yelzer of Prospect Heights and a member of Meadows Baptist Church, Rolling Meadows, will spend the summer at the Scandinavian Bible Institute in Saffie, Sweden.

Yelzer will work in maintenance and construction at the institute as part of the Greater Europe Mission's "Eurocorps" program. The program is designed to provide participants an on-location exposure to missionary life.

Yelzer is a student at Harper College, and a 1973 graduate of Hershey High School, Arlington Heights.

Village to annex 6 land parcels tonight

Six parcels of unincorporated land are scheduled to be annexed to Wheeling tonight by the village board.

A 7.2-acre site at the southeast corner of Wolf Road and Manchester, which its owners had sought to maintain as unincorporated, is among the parcels.

Village Mgr. George Passolt said each parcel is less than 60 acres, the legal limit allowable for a village to annex property without consent of the owner.

Passolt said each of the parcels is an island of unincorporated land surrounded by the village and consists of mostly undeveloped property or houses.

Four of the parcels are on McHenry Road, two on Manchester Drive and one on the south end of Chaddick Drive.

ONE OF THE parcels, at the southeast corner of Wolf Road and Manchester Drive, was part of the village but was disannexed when the board refused to rezone the land from houses to apartment use.

The owners of the property, Theodore and Marion Melzer, sought the rezoning and annexation but when the zoning change was denied in December, the Melzers wanted the land disannexed so it could maintain its county zoning. The county zoning would allow up to 20 units more per acre.

three new positions from within the district. The coordinator's job carries a base salary of $16,000 and the two assistant superintendent salaries are negotiable, he said.

Gill said the change is designed to relieve Marjorie Beu, assistant superintendent for instruction, and Associate Supt. John Burger of principal evaluation responsibilities so they are free for other work.

"The biggest change will be in John's (Burger) job," Gill said. Burger will become associate superintendent for planning, research and development.

"So many districts with declining enrollments have been caught off guard," said Gill. Burger will be responsible for charting the district's future enrollments, expenditures, building needs and goals, Gill said, a job Burger has been doing on a smaller scale due to his previous responsibilities.

GILL SAID the over-all cost of the reorganized administration to the district will be a "few thousand dollars more." The district is currently budgeting $293,892 for its administrative staff.

In other board action, approval was given to an application for $118,595 in state funds to continue the district's bilingual education project. The district plans to spend $34,963 of its own funds to supplement the program next year.

Now in its third year, Dist. 21's bilingual-bicultural program teaches 222 Spanish-speaking students English as a second language as well as aspects of their Spanish heritage.

4 new trustees to be sworn in

Four newly elected village trustees will be sworn into office this morning by Wheeling Village Clerk Evelyn Diens.

The trustees-elect, Gilbert Monoson, Otis Hedlund, Charles Kerr and John Cole, were elected April 15 on the Wheeling Improvement Party ticket, defeating two other slates which included incumbents Albert Lang, John Koepfen and Edward Berger.

The trustees will not take their seats on the village board until May 5, the first meeting date in May. The trustees technically have 10 days to claim their new seats after they are officially notified of their election but retiring board members by law serve until April 30.

Passolt said the Melzer property, as well as the other five parcels, are being annexed because they are surrounded by the village.

The board will meet at 8 p.m. in the Village Hall, 235 W. Dundee Rd.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Bufford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animal members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sales said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

SANDRA KEENEY holds some of the kittens Aid to Animals hopes to place in good homes. The roster of adoptable pets in the Palatine Township foster home usually includes 30 dogs and several cats.

home can be found and works closely with the Evanston Pound, running an adoption program at the pound every Saturday and Sunday from noon to 3 p.m.

The Aid to Animal roster of adoptable animals normally has at least 30 dogs on it and several cats. None of the animals are put up for adoption until they are in good health and have an agreeable temperament.

"You never get used to giving up an animal," Mrs. Keeney said. "When you take something into your house that has been badly abused and build up its temperament and health, you get used to it."

"In Susie's case it's a lot like a child because she is so affectionate," she said. "The only thing that makes it worth while is knowing that it will go to a good

Lake County may sue for basin

Condemnation proceedings will be necessary for acquisition of 150 acres near Buffalo Grove for a $2.1 million retention basin, a Lake County Forest Preserve District official said.

Jerrold Soesbe, district director, said there were "indications" that a lawsuit would have to be filed to secure the property, west of Arlington Heights Road, south of Checker Road.

The forest preserve district is responsible for obtaining the property as part of an agreement with the Metropolitan Sanitary District, which will construct the basin.

SOESBE SAID he had no idea how long condemnation proceedings would take. He said the three to four major owners of the property would be approached soon pending final agreement on project plans by attorneys for the two agencies.

The 260-million gallon reservoir is expected to provide major flood relief for Buffalo Grove, Wheeling and some unincorporated areas of Cook County.

Roy Carlson, an engineer with the MSD, said that with time needed for land acquisition and for design of the reservoir, it is unlikely construction will take place "this calendar year."

The MSD will pay most of the project costs and will reimburse the forest preserve district for acquisition expenses.

The village of Buffalo Grove will handle maintenance of the project.

The forest preserve district has plans to develop recreational facilities around the area and possibly a forest preserve.

Prospect Heights parks summer signup in 2 weeks

Registration for summer programs in the Prospect Heights Park District will begin in two weeks.

Four sessions of preschool classes will be offered. The fee will be $18 for the eight-week sessions that will meet at Eisenhower School, 700 N. Schoenbeck Rd., beginning June 23.

For children age 7 to 13, there will be a supervised recreation program, also at Eisenhower School. It too will start June 23 and there is a $10 fee.

OTHER CLASSES include: Boys' pee-wee baseball, children's craft classes, dog obedience, man's slow-pitch softball, garden plots, tackle football, baton corps, open-play tennis, tennis instruction, swim team, senior citizens' club and archery.

As previously announced, swimming will be at the two Wheeling Park District pools and the River Trails Park District pool through special arrangements because Lions Park Pool will not open this summer. Construction of the adjacent community center/sports complex presents a safety hazard, according to state health officials who issue pool permits.

Passes for pool use in the other two districts will be at the Prospect Heights Park District office, 13 Prospect Ct. Registration for swim lessons will be after May 10 at Wheeling Park District's Heritage Park office, 222 S. Wolf Rd., Wheeling. Further information on swim lessons is available at 537-2222.

Further information on other Prospect Heights park programs is available at 394-2848.

Career worries? Seminar may help

Wheeling High School's second annual career night, "WOW '75," will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the school, 900 S. Elmhurst Rd.

Representatives from almost 120 career fields will answer questions about their occupations.

More than 3,000 students are expected, said Craig Kopstain, president of the Wheeling High School Advisory Council. Among the occupations that will be represented are optometry, auto sales, television, electrical engineer, U.S. Navy, tool and die maker, fire science, zoologist and city management.

High school and junior high students may attend the event, which is free.

Volunteers sought to clean river

Volunteers are being sought to help clean up an eight-block stretch of the Des Plaines River south of Dundee Road.

Walter Stryzyk, a member of the Clean Streams Program, said a letter will be sent to local Scouts and Jaycees this week asking their help in the project. He said the Wheeling Civil Defense has agreed to provide trucks to haul away debris dumped along the river bank.

The project will take place May 10-11, one week prior to the running of the annual Des Plaines canoe race.

Stryzyk said other towns in which the river runs will be asked to conduct similar cleanup projects for sections of the river that run in their towns.

Persons interested in helping with the cleanup project should call Stryzyk at 766-8320, ext. 48 before 6 p.m. or 537-4589 after 6 p.m.

40-cent monthly trash-collection rate hike sought

by JOHN MAIS

Garbage-collection rates will go up 40 cents a month in Buffalo Grove if a proposed rate increase is adopted by the village board.

Village officials are expected to consider a request for a rate increase that would raise bimonthly garbage pickup bills from $9 to $9.80.

The request was submitted by James Raupp, president of Buffalo Grove Disposal Co., which provides local scavenger service.

IN A LETTER to the village board, Raupp said rate increases will be necessary largely because of the rising cost of labor. In the past several months, union wages for garbage men have gone up $1.25 per hour not counting increases for cost of living and for health, welfare and pension benefits.

Large-scale improvements, such as new recycling center construction and use of new side-loading garbage trucks were also cited as reasons for the request.

Along with the rate increases, Raupp has asked:

- To eliminate holiday garbage pickups to facilitate scheduling. Garbage pickups are twice a week in village residential areas.

- A 10-year exclusive contract with the village. Currently, Raupp is operating on a five-year pact due to expire in 1977.

RAUPP SAID he would announce a major capital improvements program affecting village scavenger service if his firm is awarded the long-term pact. The only other garbage service is provided by Wheeling Disposal Inc., which covers a small area of the village, including Sandpiper apartments.

Raupp also said a long-term contract along with greater use of plastic garbage bags would cut costs and thus may prevent further rate increases.

Two face explosive, marijuana charges

Two men, one a Buffalo Grove resident, were charged Saturday with possession of explosives, unlawful use of weapons and possession of marijuana.

In custody are Clark Meunier, 28, of 11 Oak Creek Dr., Buffalo Grove, and John Ziellinski, also 28, of Kenosha, Wis.

Both men were arrested by Sheriff's police Saturday afternoon.

Police refused to release details saying the matter is under investigation but said the men were in possession of an explosive device and weapons when arrested.

Police would not describe the device nor what kind of weapons or the quantity of marijuana seized.

The 250-million gallon reservoir is expected to provide major flood relief for Buffalo Grove, Wheeling and some unincorporated areas of Cook County.

Roy Carlson, an engineer with the MSD, said that with time needed for land acquisition and for design of the reservoir, it is unlikely construction will take place "this calendar year."

The MSD will pay most of the project costs and will reimburse the forest preserve district for acquisition expenses.

The village of Buffalo Grove will handle maintenance of the project.

The forest preserve district has plans to develop recreational facilities around the area and possibly a forest preserve.

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "...if it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Greiman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Latsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

- Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

FAA slates talks on noise control at Palwaukee

Officials from the Federal Aviation Administration will meet next week with the Wheeling Environmental Commission to discuss noise-control measures taken at Palwaukee Airport.

Al Read, an FAA official, said the May 7 session was requested to provide an opportunity for federal officials to explain the noise-control program. Read said FAA officials also are interested in hearing from village officials on steps they believe should be taken to better control noise at the airport.

Read said the FAA began instituting new noise control procedures at Palwaukee in February even though the federal agency has worked at regulating noise problems there since the 1960s.

HE SAID NEW arrival and departure procedures regarding altitude requirements are among the new procedures in effect at Palwaukee to eliminate noise problems.

Read said Runway 34, the nearest runway to the Wheeling residential area, has new flight takeoff procedures which require a left turn shortly after takeoff to avoid the residential section as much as possible.

Traffic patterns at the airport also are being monitored to determine what other procedures can be taken to curb noise at the airport, Read said.

He said the FAA also is planning to conduct a noise study of the airport in the near future as part of its noise-control program at Palwaukee.

"We'd like this to be a give and take session and get feedback from the village on what else they think we can do to control the noise problem at Palwaukee," Read said.

New trustees to take office

Wheeling building head to be named next week

by LUISA GINNETTI

Wheeling Village Mgr. George Passolt said he will name a building director as soon as the newly elected village board assumes office May 5.

Passolt said he has had someone in mind for the job "for some time" but decided to wait until after the new board is seated to announce his choice.

Passolt declined to name the person.

"I've decided as a courtesy to the board to wait until the new trustees take office to name the building director," Passolt said. "I don't have to do that because I do have the right to hire and fire but I've always followed this policy in the past with the board."

Passolt said he has interviewed "quite a few people" during the past 14 months while the job has been vacant.

ROBERT KAWINSKI, village electrical engineer, has been serving as acting building director since February 1974, when William Dieber resigned after pleading guilty to federal charges of extortion, conspiracy to commit extortion, perjury and filing a false income-tax return.

Passolt said Kaminski has done "an outstanding job" during the time he has served as acting building director. Kaminski will assume his former duties when a new building director is named.

Applicants for the post have included plan commission chairman Herbert Lortz, electrical commissioner A. M. Mansukhani and a plan reviewer for the Village of Northbrook, Walter Repholz.

Repholz said he has applied for the post and been interviewed but has received no word from the village or Passolt that he has been selected.

Repholz has worked in the Northbrook plan department for more than a year, he said. Previous to his job in Northbrook, Repholz worked for the City of Highland Park.

THE VILLAGE still is searching for a prosecutor to replace Donald Norman, who resigned last July. Norman is the Wheeling Township Democratic committeeman.

The prosecutor represents the village in court on local ordinance violations and minor traffic cases.

Passolt has said he has interviewed candidates for the prosecutor's post but as yet no decision on a successor to Norman has been made.

Norman has been serving as acting prosecutor until his replacement is named.

Career worries? Seminar may help

Wheeling High School's second annual career night, "WOW '75," will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday at the school, 900 S. Elmhurst Rd.

Representatives from almost 120 career fields will answer questions about their occupations.

More than 3,000 students are expected, said Craig Kopstain, president of the Wheeling High School Advisory Council. Among the occupations that will be represented are optometry, auto sales, television, electrical engineer, U.S. Navy, tool and die maker, fire science, zoologist and city management.

High school and junior high students may attend the event, which is free.

Prowler flees home of Betty Spence

A prowler Friday fled the home of former U.S. congressional candidate Betty Spence after being detected by her son, said Buffalo Grove police.

Sgt. Kenneth Blanchette was told by John Spence, 19, that a man entered their home, 901 Westbourne Ln. about 1:45 p.m. The man, described as 5 feet 2 inches tall with light brown or blond shoulder-length hair with a light-colored shirt, fled through an attached garage.

Nothing was reported stolen from the home and there were no signs of forced entry, Blanchette said.

Some expenditures may be cut

$4.5 million budget OK seen tonight

The Buffalo Grove Village Board is expected to adopt the village's fiscal 1975-76 budget at a meeting tonight.

Village Pres. Edward Fabish said some expenditures may be trimmed from the $4.5 million budget prior to its passage. The new fiscal year begins Thursday.

Several other items will come before the board tonight including:

- Consideration of a construction bid for the new public works garage totaling $322,000. Fabish said last week he was concerned officials might have to make changes in plans for the garage to cut costs in case now state legislation is enacted eliminating food and drug sales taxes. He said Sunday, however, a review of the plans showed there were no unnecessary items that could be taken out.
- Review of a request for annex-tion of a 45-foot strip of property near Buffalo Grove and Dundee roads. The land is included on the building site of the recently approved Kohl's Shopping Center.

The village board will meet at 8 p.m. in the Municipal Building, 50 Raupp Blvd.

Fall preschool signup Saturday

Registration will be Saturday for fall preschool classes sponsored by the Buffalo Grove Park District.

From 9 to 10:30 a.m. parents may register their children for morning or afternoon sessions of three day a week classes while from 10:30 to noon, registrations will be taken for classes meeting two days a week. Classes will meet in the Moser Preschool Center next to the park district office, 150 Raupp Blvd.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Bufford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animals members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sale said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

SANDRA KEENEY holds some of the kittens Aid to Animals hopes to place in good homes. The roster of adoptable pets in the Palatine Township foster home usually includes 30 dogs and several cats.

Casey may bat for Mudville—but Susie's the pitcher

by STEVE BROWN

Don't be surprised if a few pigtails stick out under the baseball caps on Little League players around Des Plaines this summer.

Little League is no longer a bastion of male supremacy. Girls have picked up some balls and bats and have joined the teams.

So far, five girls have been drafted to play on teams in the five Little League associations in Des Plaines.

IT REPRESENTS a far different story than in years past when national Little League officials went into court to limit the "national pastime" to boys.

The girls, Donna Logisz, Jean Tokey, Joy Robackowski, Lee Fuchs and Chelly Corr, aren't making a big deal about gaining a spot on the Des Plaines teams.

"I just like playing baseball," Joy said.

The 11-year-old, who will be playing in the Devon-Higgins League, said she learned to play baseball with a number of boys in the neighborhood.

THAT APPEARS to be a common denominator among the girls drafted onto the various squads.

The girls are somewhat reluctant to predict how they will fare this summer, but if the tryouts are any factor they should do all right.

Donna was the first pick in the draft of 43 players to round out the ranks of the 13-team league. She will be playing with the American Legion team in the South Side Little League Assn.

"I don't expect any problems with the boys," Donna said, adding that she had been playing baseball with boys in the area for some time.

THE GIRLS' parents have no objections to their daughters' being one of the guys.

"I was concerned at first with throwing her into the constant companionship of boys, but I don't think it will do any harm," Florence Logisz said, saying her daughter is a pretty good ballplayer.

The girls don't attribute their breakthrough to the women's liberation movement.

"The boys have been her buddies and Joy said she was only trying out because she liked to play," Mrs. F. Robackowski said.

Coaches and managers are looking forward to this new wrinkle in the baseball program.

"We don't know how everything will go, but we think some of the girls will be among our better players," one coach said.

Charity begins... with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN

First of a series

Charity is big business in the North-west suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-athon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herald survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 20.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

- Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Blanco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $85.

• Irwin Horwitz, 9210 Church St., Des Plaines, is a 12-year-old former salesman for the National Youth Clubs of America Inc. Together with his friend Edward Rosenberg of Des Plaines, Horwitz joined a team of youthful door-to-door candy sales people in the north suburbs in September 1973. He dropped out of the group following a dispute with a team leader.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. I'm poor and I want to get money to go to Disneyland. I need to sell 500 boxes of candy and I've sold 492 boxes. Would you buy one?' " The youth's commission on the sale of a $1.75 box of candy was a quarter, "and if you're the best seller of the day you get an extra dollar," Horwitz said. The "big guy in the organization" was Morris Friedman, he said.

Science fiction and mystery shelve traditional classics

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Rod Serling and Mike Royko are taking their place alongside Ernest Hemingway and Nathaniel Hawthorne in the study of American literature in High School Dist. 211 this year.

Juniors now have the option of studying science fiction, mystery stories and ethnic literature along with the usual doses of Mark Twain, Henry David Thoreau and Herman Melville by choosing any two of eight one-semester elective courses in American literature.

The new program replaces a survey course of American literature which was required of all juniors. It is now being used at Fremd, Palatine, Conant and Hoffman Estates high schools and Schaumburg High School plans to use the program next year.

IT GIVES STUDENTS "a little more freedom of choice," said Helen Sohersten, English department chairman at Fremd. Many teachers and students believe a "lack of interest or a dissatisfaction" with the old program and teachers decided to explore new ways of presenting American literature, she said.

A poll taken at Palatine High School this year shows that more than 90 per cent of the juniors there are in favor of the new program, Mrs. Sohersten said.

In most of the high schools, science fiction and fantasy has been the most popular course among students. The students study the development of science fiction from Edgar Allan Poe to Rod Serling of television's "The Twilight Zone" fame.

OTHER COURSES in the junior elective program are the American classics, an advanced course dealing with the major works of John Steinbeck, Walt Whitman, F. Scott Fitzgerald and others; contemporary American literature, which includes works from the 1940s to the 1970s; highlights of American literature; views of the minorities, works written by minorities; American social conscience, dealing with issues of political corruption, prejudice and urban problems; the challenge of the frontiers, which includes the literature of American pioneers from the pilgrims to the astronauts; and tales of mystery and adventure which deal with detective stories, mysteries and adventure stories.

Another course, American studies, is being taught at Fremd and Schaumburg high schools this year. The course combines junior level American history and American literature in a one semester course taught two periods a day by an English teacher and a history teacher.

American studies has been an overwhelming success at Fremd High School and it was chosen by the students over the elective courses.

Hoffman Estates police probe assaults on 3 women

Hoffman Estates police are investigating three assaults on women last week including one in which a 29-year-old woman was attacked while sleeping.

The victim was sleeping at about 3:20 a.m. Thursday when a man, with ponytail pulled over his head, entered through a window in her Barrington Square home and attempted to blind her with a cord, police said.

She struggled with the intruder, and he fled out the window, authorities reported.

The woman was not injured and nothing was taken in the break-in. The attacker was described as being about 5 feet 8 inches tall and weighing about 150 pounds. He was about 20 years old, police were told.

Two other assaults were reported to police, in both cases after the victim reported being followed from Denny's restaurant, 1175 N. Roselle Rd.

A 19-year-old Palatine girl told police she was leaving Denny's early Saturday when a man approached her car and asked for directions. The man reached through the open car window and attempted to grab her as the car backed away. As she stopped to go forward, the man grabbed at her again before she drove away, authorities said.

The other assault occurred early

Thursday in the 100 block of Morton Street. A 33-year-old Hoffman Estates woman told police she thought a man followed her from Denny's and, after she left her car, he approached her and grabbed her arm. She ran to her car.

The attackers were described to be from 150 to 160 pounds with brown hair. Both suspects were young, authorities were told.

Burglars hit auto dealership second time

Schaumburg police are investigating a weekend truck theft and two burglaries, one in which about $7,000 worth of tools was taken from Ed Murphy Buick-Opel Inc., 1000 E. Golf Rd.

Police were told the stolen items included power tools. No signs of forced entry could be found, authorities said.

It was the second time the auto dealership was the victim of a large burglary. In October, burglars took an estimated $3,800 worth of car parts and accessories.

In the other breakin, Richard Del-Guidice, 605 Tilip L., told police Saturday about $300 worth of liquor, tools and an adding machine were taken from his home. Entry was gained by forcing open the kitchen door, authorities reported.

Harold Larsen, 1304 Plymouth Ct., Arlington Heights, reported that his 1974 pickup truck was stolen Friday from a parking lot at 600 Woodfield Dr. The vehicle was valued at $5,500.

Cycle goes off road; Hoffman man 'good'

A Hoffman Estates man was reported in good condition Sunday at Northwest Community Hospital, Arlington Heights, after a motorcycle accident Saturday night on Moon Lake Drive near Fire Station 3.

George Durham, 25, of 1481 Cornell Ct., suffered cuts and bruises when his motorcycle went off the road at about 9:30 p.m. He was transported to the hospital by a Hoffman Estates Fire Dept. ambulance.

Burglars, vandals hit fire stations

The radio was taken from the alarm room at Fire Station 3, 1700 Moon Lake Dr., Lt. Jerome Danowski reported upon his return from an emergency call early Sunday.

Vandals drove a car across the front lawn of Fire Station 2, 469 Hassell Rd., while firefighters were out on a call Saturday, police were told.

Boy, 16, killed when auto overturns

Killed was Joel G. Ortmann, of 836 N. Belmont St.

Arlington Heights police said Ortmann was a passenger in a Volkswagen driven by a 15-year-old companion. The driver, whose name was not released, was not injured, police said.

The car was northbound on Kennicott Avenue near Grove Street, Arlington Heights, when it passed another car. Police said the car struck the curb after pulling back into its lane and then rolled over once.

No charges have been filed.

Two-story school for Winston Knolls

A two-story, mansard-roofed brick school is planned for Hoffman Estates' Winston Knolls subdivision, according to preliminary sketches released by Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 architect Richard Donatoni.

The first sketches have been approved by the board of education, but final preliminary drawings with only minor changes are now being done, said Joseph Kiszka, Dist. 15 deputy superintendent and building committee chairman. Del Bianco, Schwartz and Donatoni, Chicago, is designing the building.

Although board of education estimates set the building's cost at about $2 million, Kiszka said no firm cost will be known until the working drawings are completed.

The 30-classroom school, to be built on Winston Drive next to Hoffman Estates park property, will have a capacity for 900 students from kindergarten through sixth grade. Dist. 15 officials estimate that the school will open

The course helps to tie themes in both literature and history together. "They learn how to correlate different things. They don't just study separate facts," Mrs. Sohersten said. In the past students might study the Purlans at the beginning of the year in American history but wouldn't read "The Crucible" until the end of the year in English class.

All the literature courses have strict requirements for student writing. Students must complete articles, short stories and term papers for each of the courses. The electives have been so popular at Fremd, Mrs. Sohersten said, that many "eager beavers" try to schedule more than the required two semesters of literature.

The electives program is an experimental program this year. The district recently extended the program for another year when it will be reviewed and evaluated.

Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN
First of a series

Charity is big business in the Northwest suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-a-thon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herold survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 20.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

- Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Blanco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $35.

• Irwin Horwitz, 9210 Church St., Des Plaines, is a 12-year-old former salesman for the National Youth Clubs of America Inc. Together with his friend Edward Rosenberg of Des Plaines, Horwitz joined a team of youthful door-to-door candy sales people in the north suburbs in September 1973. He dropped out of the group following a dispute with a team leader.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. I'm poor and I want to get money to go to Disneyland. I need to sell 500 boxes of candy and I've sold 492 boxes. Would you buy one?' " The youth's commission on the sale of a $1.75 box of candy was a quarter, "and if you're the best seller of the day you get an extra dollar," Horwitz said. The "big guy in the organization" was Morris Friedman, he said.

Retarded-adult home opening delayed a month

The Meadows, a controversial home for retarded adults under construction in Rolling Meadows, will not open until the end of June, about a month later than previously announced.

Byrn Witt, partner in Meadows Sheltered Care Inc., which will operate the home at 3250 S. Plum Grove Rd., said Saturday occupancy has been delayed. But he and his partner, Robert Rutzen, still intend to proceed with the home, and still plan to invite area homeowners to serve on an advisory board, he said.

Witt said he will begin contacting homeowners' groups and other agencies, such as Clearbrook Center, in the next two to three weeks about membership on the board.

Witt and Rutzen agreed in April to establish the board as a vehicle of communication between the home and Rolling Meadows residents. When plans for the facility were announced in March after construction began, residents in the vicinity of the home objected strongly. Witt met with the homeowners twice, once in a meeting called by the Dawngate Homeowners Assn. and once before the Rolling Meadows City Council.

THE CITIZEN board will be purely advisory, and its recommendations will not be binding in any fashion on the operators of the home, Witt said.

The Dawngate board of directors during the weekend distributed a letter to its residents asking them to suggest guidelines they hope to see in the administration of the home, and in its relationships with its neighbors.

"The home is there to stay. We're just hoping we can set up some guidelines for how it's to be run," said Mrs. Howard Mayes, association president. The board may request a private meeting with Witt and Mayor Roland J. Meyer to present the suggestions.

"We'll certainly consider them," Witt said, adding he wants to discuss any requests from the homeowners to help establish good community relations and communications.

Some of the homeowners have urged Witt and Rutzen to install a fence around the grounds of The Meadows, but Witt has said he would prefer shrubbery and other types of plantings.

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "... if it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Greiman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Netsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts would overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

- Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

'Pop lit' a hit— contemporaries replace classics

by KATHERINE ROYCE

Rod Serling and Mike Royko are taking their place alongside Ernest Hemingway and Nathaniel Hawthorne in the study of American literature in High School Dist. 211 this year.

Juniors now have the option of studying science fiction, mystery stories and ethnic literature along with the usual doses of Mark Twain, Henry David Thoreau and Herman Melville by choosing any two of eight one-semester elective courses in American literature.

The new program replaces a survey course of American literature which was required of all juniors. It is now being used at Fremd, Palatine, Co. and Hoffman Estates high schools and Schaumburg High School plans to use the program next year.

IT GIVES STUDENTS "a little more freedom of choice," said Helen Sohersten, English department chairman at Fremd. Many teachers and students believe a "lack of interest or a dissatisfaction" with the old program and teachers decided to explore new ways of presenting American literature, she said.

A poll taken at Palatine High School this year shows that more than 90 percent of the juniors there are in favor of the new program, Mrs. Sohersten said.

In most of the high schools, science fiction and fantasy has been the most popular course among students. The students study the development of science fiction from Edgar Allan Poe to Rod Serling of television's "The Twilight Zone" fame.

OTHER COURSES in the junior elective program are the American classics, an advanced course dealing with the major works of John Steinbeck, Walt Whitman, F. Scott Fitzgerald and others; contemporary American literature, which includes works from the 1940s to the 1970s; highlights of American literature; views of the minorities, works written by minorities; American social conscience, dealing with issues of political corruption, prejudice and urban problems; the challenge of the frontiers, which includes the literature of American pioneers from the pilgrims to the astronauts; and tales of mystery and adventure which deal with detective stories, mysteries and adventure stories.

Another course, American studies, is being taught at Fremd and Schaumburg high schools this year. The course combines junior level American history and American literature in a one semester course taught two periods a day by an English teacher and a history teacher.

American studies has been an overwhelming success at Fremd High School and it was chosen by the students over the elective courses.

THE COURSE combines the study of American history, literature, art, architecture and music. When students are learning about the Salem witch trials in history, they read Arthur Miller's "The Crucible." When they study the industrial movement, they read "The Jungle" by Upton Sinclair, and when they study political reform, they read "Boss" by Chicago Daily News columnist Mike Royko.

The course helps to tie themes in both literature and history together. "They learn how to correlate different things. They don't just study separate facts," Mrs. Sohersten said. In the past students might study the Puritans at the beginning of the year in American history but wouldn't read "The Crucible" until the end of the year in English class.

All the literature courses have strict requirements for student writing. Students must complete articles, short stories and term papers for each of the courses. The electives have been so popular at Fremd, Mrs. Sohersten said, that many "eager beavers" try to schedule more than the required two semesters of literature.

The electives program is an experimental program this year. The district recently extended the program for another year when it will be reviewed and evaluated.

Arlington Heights police said Ortman was a passenger in a Volkswagen driven by a 15-year-old companion. The driver, whose name was not released, was not injured, police said.

The car was northbound on Kennicott Avenue near Grove Street, Arlington Heights, when it passed another car. Police said the car struck the curb after pulling back into its lane and then rolled over once.

Making them adoptable Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent er fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

The Aid to Animal roster of adoptable animals normally has at least 30 dogs on it and several cats. None of the animals are put up for adoption until they are in good health and have an agreeable temperament.

"You never get used to giving up an animal," Mrs. Keeney said. "When you take something into your house that has been badly abused and build up its temperament and health, you get used to it."

"In Susie's case it's a lot like a child because she is so affectionate," she said. "The only thing that makes it worth while is knowing that it will go to a good

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animal members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sales said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Parks support land-donation law for village

Palatine Park District officials are supporting a proposed village land-donation ordinance because it will simplify time-consuming land negotiations with developers.

Park Board Pres. James Jones cited the time involved in the park district's recent negotiations with the developer of the 365-acre Plum Grove Hills project that have resulted in a 42-acre donation to the district.

"Fred Hall (park district director) and I sat through many village plan commission meetings trying to negotiate with the developer on how much and what kind of land should be donated," Jones said.

"Hopefully the provisions in this new ordinance would alleviate some of the ironing-out that we have otherwise had to do, which takes a lot of time," he said.

PARK BOARD members "obviously support the ordinance" because it ensures future property for the park district to develop in all areas of the village, Jones said.

Under the proposed ordinance, developers would be required to donate 5.5 acres for parks for every 1,000 persons in the development.

Developers would also have to donate 11 acres for an elementary school for every 600 students expected to live in the development, 19 acres for a junior high school for every 900 students, and 48 acres for a high school for every 2,300 students.

Builder donations are now negotiated among the developer, the village zoning board and the park and school board. There is no village ordinance, however, requiring donations.

Jones said the park board recommended only minor wording changes in the ordinance after reviewing it.

However, Jones says he is somewhat concerned over the "cash-in-lieu-of-land provision" in the ordinance.

THE ORDINANCE allows developers to donate cash in lieu of land in an amount equivalent to the value of the acreage that would be required for the schools and parks. The cash contributions would be based on the fair market values of the land and the ordinance suggests $20,000 per acre.

"We are at the village's mercy to look out for our interest in this type of thing. I would hope that the village would consult the park board and the school boards when a cash contribution is made in lieu of land," Jones said.

He said there have been instances in other villages where the cash donations have been delayed or never made to the park and school districts (Continued on Page 5)

'Papa' 'n' Mark Twain, move over!

by KATHERINE BOYCE

Rod Serling and Mike Royko are taking their place alongside Ernest Hemingway and Nathaniel Hawthorne in the study of American literature in 11th School Dist. 211 this year.

Juniors now have the option of studying science fiction, mystery stories and ethnic literature along with the usual doses of Mark Twain, Henry David Thoreau and Herman Melville by choosing any two of eight one-semester elective courses in American literature.

The new program replaces a survey course of American literature which was required of all juniors. It is now being used at Fremd, Palatine, Conant and Hoffman Estates high schools and Schaumburg High School plans to use the program next year.

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "...if it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Grieman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Latsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

- Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

'Pop lit' a hit— contemporaries replace classics

gram and teachers decided to explore new ways of presenting American literature, she said.

A poll taken at Palatine High School this year shows that more than 90 percent of the juniors there are in favor of the new program, Mrs. Sohersten said.

Other courses in the junior elective program are the American classics, an advanced course dealing with the major works of John Steinbeck, Walt Whitman, F. Scott Fitzgerald and others; contemporary American literature, which includes works from the 1940s to the 1970s; highlights of American literature: views of the minorities, works written by minorities; American social conscience, dealing with issues of political corruption, prejudice and urban problems; the challenge of the frontiers, which includes the literature of American pioneers from the pilgrims to the astronauts; and tales of mystery and adventure which deal with detective stories, mysteries and adventure stories.

Another course, American studies, is being taught at Fremd and Schaumburg high schools this year. The course combines junior level American history and American literature in a one semester course taught two periods a day by an English teacher and a history teacher.

American studies has been an overwhelming success at Fremd High School and it was chosen by the students over the elective courses.

THE COURSE combines the study of American history, literature, art, architecture and music. When students are learning about the Salem witch trials in history, they read Arthur Miller's "The Crucible." When they study the industrial movement, they read "The Jungle" by Upton Sinclair, and when they study political reform, they read "Boss" by Chicago Daily News columnist Mike Royko.

The course helps to tie themes in both literature and history together. "They learn how to correlate different things. They don't just study separate facts," Mrs. Sohersten said. In the past students might study the Puritans at the beginning of the year in American history but wouldn't read "The Crucible" until the end of the year in English class.

All the literature courses have strict requirements for student writing. Students must complete articles, short stories and term papers for each of the courses. The electives have been so popular at Fremd, Mrs. Sohersten said, that many "enger beavers" try to schedule more than the required two semesters of literature.

The electives program is an experimental program this year. The district recently extended the program for another year when it will be reviewed and evaluated.

Two injured slightly in auto accident

Two persons were treated and released from Northwest Community Hospital late Saturday after suffering minor injuries in a two-car accident on Sterling Avenue at Northwest Highway, Palatine.

Marvin Kaplan, Northbrook and Jerry Layman, 1013 W. Baldwin Rd., Palatine, were taken to the hospital by the Palatine Fire Dept. following the accident. The mishap apparently occurred when the car Kaplan was driving struck Layman's car as it pulled away from a stop sign.

Kaplan was ticketed for failure to yield the right of way at a stop sign and is to appear in Arlington Heights branch of Circuit Court May 22.

Palatine-Rolling Meadows Dist. 15 officials also have suggested a careful approach to the cash contribution provision, recommending the district hold the land and cash donations in trust.

High School Dist. 211 officials also will review the proposed ordinance before it goes back to village officials for further study.

The village board has been considering the adoption of the ordinance while reviewing their planned-unit-development regulations.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Buford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animals members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sales said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN
First of a series

Charity is big business in the Northwest suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-a-thon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $1.2 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herald survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 20.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

- Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Bianco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $85.

Murauskis asks partial vote recount

by TOM VON MALDER

Norman Murauskis, defeated by 48 votes in her bid for election to the Mount Prospect Village Board, has filed for a partial recount in five precincts.

"I just felt compelled to go ahead with this," said Mrs. Murauskis, 47, of 1026 Pheasant Tr. "With so many paper ballots and split votes, there is always room for error. I don't mean to offend anyone though."

Mrs. Murauskis received 2,276 votes in the April 15 village election, 48 votes behind Trustee-elect Edward B. Rhea Jr. Both ran as independents for a two-year board seat.

A partial or discovery recount allows a candidate to demand a recount of up to 25 per cent of the precincts in an election, but the candidate must pay $10 per precinct.

THE RECOUNT will be conducted by the village's board of election commissioners at 9 a.m. Saturday in the village clerk's office, 112 E. North-west Hwy.

The precincts in which the recount will be made are Precinct 2, Lions Park, where Rhea received 174 votes to 164 for Mrs. Murauskis; Precinct 3, Sunset School, where each got 156 votes; Precinct 10, Fairview School, where Rhea led 155 to 118; Precinct 17, Frost School (north), where Rhea led 136 to 127 votes; and Precinct 19, John Jay School, where Rhea led 163 to 156 votes.

Mrs. Murauskis said she tried to pick the precincts in which she was closest to Rhea and where there may have been some errors. "I contacted as many poll watchers as I could for their opinions," she said, adding that several poll watchers said there could have been errors made because of judges' inexperience.

She said there appears to be a discrepancy in Precinct 10. "There seems to be quite a few votes missing when you tally them," she said.

IN PRECINCT 10, 492 ballots were cast which could have yielded 984 votes for two-year candidates if each person voting had voted for two candidates as allowed. The total votes received by the five candidates for the two two-year terms, totaled 737, however.

Mrs. Murauskis said if the partial recount discloses "several discrepancies," she would seek a full

Demel renews bid for Euclid-Wheeling Rd. signal

Lloyd Demel, a River Trails Dist. 26 Board of Education member, is renewing his campaign to have a traffic signal installed on Euclid Avenue at Wheeling Road for the safety of Euclid School students.

Demel is hoping that an upcoming Mount Prospect traffic survey will convince the village to install traffic signals at the intersection. Wheeling Road now has stop signs where it intersects Euclid Avenue, but Euclid traffic does not stop or slow down.

Michael Pakala, traffic engineer for Mount Prospect, said that a survey showing traffic volumes and trouble spots throughout the village will be taken "within the next two to three weeks." If the survey's results show that enough vehicles and pedestrians use the intersection, Pakala said a traffic signal could be installed on Euclid Avenue.

Demel, whose children attend Euclid, has worked with school district officials for two years to have the Illinois Dept. of Transportation reduce the 50-m.p.h. speed limit or install stop signs on Euclid Avenue, a state road. Two state transportation department traffic surveys were done on the intersection, but the state concluded that the intersection was fine as it is because children living north of Euclid Avenue are bused to Euclid School.

Pakala believes the traffic on Euclid Avenue may have become heavier since the street was recently widened between Wolf and River roads. "I'm going at this with a new outlook," he said.

People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animal members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sale said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

Rhea said he will "definitely" be represented at the partial recount session, which will be conducted by the village's board of election commissioners — Mayor Robert D. Teichert, Village Clerk Donald Goodman and the senior village trustee, George B. Anderson. Rhea said he is confident his victory will stand up.

Rainstorm death averted

Barbara and Dave Williams, a young couple now residing in Wheeling, have been planning a "dream" move to Mount Prospect for a long time. Barb, though, almost missed seeing her wish come true. She came close to losing her life in the big rainstorm a week ago.

Barbara, 22, works at Lutheran General Hospital, Park Ridge, as a secretary in the billing department. Dave was on his way to pick her up after work when the Friday evening storm hit. Twice Dave's car stalled on the way and then it quit completely on a side street just north of the hospital. Barb, in the meantime, was waiting for Dave in her usual spot at the hospital's front entrance.

Dave left the disabled car and walked to the drug store in the medical building across from Lutheran General to find a phone. He called Barb's office and asked that someone go to her and explain what had happened to the car and where he was.

DEMPSTER STREET was like a wide river with water covering the street, curbs, culverts and extending up the lawns. Cars were stalled in the middle of the street.

Dave was standing at the window of the pharmacy, talking, and looking across the way at Barb. When the rain let up a bit, he saw Barb start across the lawn toward the drug store. He thought, "She's a brave girl to try to walk through that water."

Suddenly Barb was gone.

DAVE'S FIRST thought was that she was out of view, behind a stalled car. He immediately knew better, however. A drug store delivery boy, Bob Griesser, 18-year-old senior at Maine East High School, Park Ridge, was watching Barb with Dave and also saw her disappear. Bob and Dave ran toward the spot where Barb had been walking.

Barb, it seems, eager to get to Dave, stepped out on the grass that was covered with water. As she walked along she stepped into a culvert completely filled with rain water. The current of the surging water was tremendous and pulled her down and toward a large round drainage pipe under the driveways leading to the hospital. She remembers holding her breath and grabbing hold of the large metal rim to keep from being sucked in.

From their office window overlooking Dempster, Drs. Richard C. Schultz, John Wood and J. Ralph Seaton, plastic surgeons, also saw Barb go down in the water. They waited for her to emerge. When she didn't, Nurse Mary East (a Mount Prospecter of 702 Eastwood) reports, "They ran out to help, splashing through the water fully clothed, shoes and all."

DAVE, THE DRUG store delivery boy, the three doctors and a passerby all jumped into the culvert after Barb. Somehow they managed to get her out without being pulled in with her. She was unconscious and near death.

"She was white and limp," said Dave, "and I was hysterical."

The doctors didn't try for a pulse, just provided immediate resuscitation and chest-beat massage.

BARB WAS THEN taken back to Lutheran General — as a patient. She spent six days recovering.

The doctors believe that the thing that saved Barb was that she held her breath for the first couple of minutes when first captured by the water.

Grateful husband Dave commented, "There were so many wonderful people who helped. The doctors, the delivery boy, the passerby. Why, someone even brought a blanket for warmth as we worked on her."

Barb, commenting on the harrowing experience, said, "I wish I could personally thank everyone who helped. There were so many."

New trustees, department heads in transitional meet

Newly elected Mount Prospect village trustees met with village department heads Saturday in an informal information session designed to ease their transition into office.

The four-hour meeting, organized by Village Mgr. Robert J. Eppley, was described by two of the trustees-elect who attended as helpful and beneficial.

"It was a routine meeting but I think it was very helpful and good for the spirit of cooperation," Leo Floros said. "We got volumes of materials in the forms of year-end reports and long-range department reports and I think the manager is to be commended for arranging it."

Edward Rhea said the presentation by department heads was a good background session for the new trustees.

"There were no surprises and no controversy," he said. "It was just an excellent and factual session."

Michael Minton and Theodore Wattenberg, who will join Floros and Rhea as trustees on the board next month, attended the session but could not be reached for comment Sunday.

Eppley said he organized the meeting to introduce the new trustees to department heads and acquaint the newly elected officials to various village duties.

The four new trustees and Hendricks will be sworn into office at the May 6 village board meeting.

Charity begins...with ripoff artists?

by LEA TONKIN
First of a series

Charity is big business in the Northwest suburbs. As in many other metropolitan areas in the nation, the variety of appeals expands each year. Whether it's the holiday bell-ringer, the promotional mailer or the bike-athon pedaler, the common denominator of the charity campaigns is a straightforward appeal: give.

The simple concept of sharing with the less fortunate is translated into action as contributions pour into charity coffers. On a national scale, charities pull in billions of dollars annually. Illinois charity assets alone amount to $12 billion.

How many contributors take time to track down their charitable dollars? Recent investigations by the Illinois Attorney General's Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations indicate the need for donor education and stepped-up enforcement of state charity regulation.

The Charity Business$

WHAT THE STATE found in its initial checks of charity operations is an average 15 cents out of every dollar given to charity will eventually reach the intended recipient, said Donald

Mulack, litigation chief in the Division of Charitable Trusts and Solicitations. "Someone is getting rich unjustly at the expense of the public," he said. A Herald survey of 12 widely known charities indicates 29.4 to 91.9 cents on the dollar donated to the charities is used for program-related expenditures.

The potential for abuse within charity ranks is indicated in the following examples of charitable and quasi-charitable operations in the Northwest suburbs and vicinity:

- Business executives in the Northwest suburbs and throughout the Chicago metropolitan area were solicited by the "official" Illinois Police Bulletin magazine representatives during 1973 and 1974. Donations of up to $150 for advertisements in the publication were to be used by the "official" operation to offset publication costs.

The magazine was billed as a publication that would pay tribute to police officers. Following the collection of a large, unspecified amount of funds by operators Thaddeus C. Toudor, Joseph Bianco and James Calona, Illinois Atty. Gen. William Scott obtained an injunction barring further operations in the state.

The magazine has no connection with police organizations and has no professional value, Scott charged. The whereabouts of Toudor, his associates and the money they collected for the magazine are unknown.

Louis DeGrande, Chicago, a runner for Illinois Police Bulletin, was arrested July 16, 1974, by Buffalo Grove police and charged with theft by deception after he attempted to collect an advertisement payment from a Buffalo Grove merchant. Charges were reduced to solicitation without a village license at a Nov. 12 hearing at Cook County Circuit Court in Arlington Heights. DeGrande pleaded guilty and was fined $45.

• Irwin Horwitz, 9210 Church St., Des Plaines, is a 12-year-old former salesman for the National Youth Clubs of America Inc. Together with his friend Edward Rosenberg of Des Plaines, Horwitz joined a team of youthful door-to-door candy sales people in the north suburbs in September 1973. He dropped out of the group following a dispute with a team leader.

Horwitz later testified before Cook County Circuit Court Chancery Division. He remembers: "They told us to say, 'I'm with the National Youth Clubs of America. I'm poor and I want to get money to go to Disneyland. I need to sell 500 boxes of candy and I've sold 492 boxes. Would you buy one?' " The youth's commission on the sale of a $1.75 box of candy was a quarter, "and if you're the best seller of the day you get an extra dollar," Horwitz said. The "big guy in the organization" was Morris Friedman, he said.

Friedman, who listed business ad-

Spring spree

Police, residents begin crackdown on new vandalism kick—'lawn jobs'

by JOE SWICKARD

"It's a terrible feeling. I looked out my window and my God, it's happening. There's a car on my lawn and there's nothing I can do about it."

More and more residents of Arlington Heights are echoing the woman's complaint as the usual spring spate of vandalism has taken a new turn this year: lawn jobs.

It's practiced primarily by youths, who drive their cars on a lawn and spin the tires, ruining the sod.

THE ARLINGTON Heights Police Dept. reported there have been about 50 incidents in the village since March 1. And while all forms of vandalism are on the rise, vandalism caused by cars is leading the pack and the police say they are going to get tough about it.

"The least they are going to get out of it is reckless driving and they can get charged with criminal damage to property," Capt. Jack Aldrich said.

Aldrich said the police department is going to prosecute violators "to the full extent of the law" to combat the growing problem.

"There's going to be unrelenting prosecution. We're going to start prosecuting and keep prosecuting," he said. "We're going to pinch them and pinch them good."

The reckless-driving charge carries penalties of up to six months in jail and/or a $500 fine. Criminal damage to property less than $150 can net the offender up to a year in jail and/or a $1,000 fine.

For the vandal who causes more than $150 worth of damage, the penalty escalates to a possible jail term of one to three years.

ALDRICH SAID the problem is not confined to one area. A survey of police records indicates the problem is village-wide, with the heaviest concentration occurring during the weekends.

"I don't know why they do it or why they are doing it more now," Aldrich said. "Maybe they think it's a game. But the game's getting too damned expensive."

The police recently made their first two arrests in connection with the vandalism. The boys, 16 and 18 years old, have been charged with reckless driving.

One resident living on the north end of town has experienced lawn damage about a dozen times in the past year and she's tired of it.

"If they knew the hours spent. It's been a very trying experience... Mommy and Daddy didn't buy this house for us. We bought it ourselves and try to keep it nice," she said.

SHE SPOKE OF the accumulated aggravations capped one night recently when she was awakened by the loud exhaust pipes.

"I looked out and they were parked with their lights out for four or five minutes. Then one got out and checked

10th District backers cheer

Walker veto of 'anti-Mikva' remap plan promised

by BOB LAHEY

Nearly 400 10th District residents rose to their feet cheering Sunday afternoon when an aide to Gov. Daniel Walker promised them the governor would veto a proposed redistricting plan which would probably eliminate their congressman, U.S. Rep. Abner J. Mikva, from Congress.

The announcement was made at a meeting called by the 10th Congressional District Committee, which issued a seven-point statement criticizing the remap that they said was drawn chiefly to assure Chicago control of nine districts overlapping city and suburban boundaries.

The governor's assistant, Ira Belsky of Evanston, was interrupted by cheering when he said, "The governor has asked me to tell you that he will veto this map..."

AFTER THE applause died, he completed the sentence, "... If it reaches his desk in the present form."

Belsky implied that the governor would not approve a remap which placed U.S. Rep. Sidney R. Yates, D-9th, and Mikva, another liberal Democrat, in the same district, as the current plan would do.

"I think it is clear that Dan Walker

wants Ab Mikva in Congress," Belsky told the audience.

EARLIER, STATE Rep. Aaron Jaffe, D-Skokie, called the map "anti-black and anti-Jewish," and State Rep. Alan J. Greiman, D-Skokie, agreed the redistricting plan would probably be passed by the state Senate.

"They have 29 votes and they are breaking arms at this moment" to get the last vote needed for passage in the Senate, Jaffe said.

Greiman and Jaffe agreed, however, that the bill probably will be defeated in the House.

BUT LYNN Williams, New Trier Township committeeman, and member of the Illinois Democratic Central Committee, warned that opposition to the plan by legislators is "not without cost."

Williams reported that State Sen. William Morris, D-Waukegan, had told him that the legislative programs of both Morris and State Sen. Dawn Clark Netsch, D-Chicago, have both been killed by the Democratic Senate leadership because of their public opposition to the redistricting plan, which is sponsored by Senate Pres. Cecil Partee, D-Chicago.

Williams urged that voters support legislators opposed to the redistricting through letters and telegrams to help them withstand the intensive pressure being exerted in behalf of the redistricting program by the Chicago Democratic regulars.

AMONG THE points listed in the statement drafted by the committeemen from the five townships in the district, were:

- "Sacrifice" of two Democratic incumbents, Mikva and U.S. Rep. Tim Hall, D-15th.

- The fact that all nine districts which overlap the city and suburbs are dominated by the Chicago population in the districts.

- Mayor Daley failed to consult with Democratic leaders with the exception, by his own admission, of Chicago Aldermen Edward Burke, Vito Marzullo and Edward Vrdolyak and former Ald. Thomas Keane.

The map proposed by Partee would place Abner Mikva's home residence in a district including Yates' North Shore district, and would remove Wheeling Township from the present 12th District, combining it with parts of the current 10th District, which would have no incumbent congressman under the Partee proposal.

Schools approve 3 new jobs for administration

The Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21 Board of Education has approved a reorganization of the district's administration, adding three positions.

The positions of administrative assistant for special services and administrative assistant for staff/community relations, now held by R. Steven Stavrakas and Richard Wynn, have been eliminated in the reorganization, said Supt. Kenneth Gill. The two men will be reassigned to other district positions, Gill said, although plans are indefinite.

Their responsibilities will be primarily divided between two new assistant superintendents for support services and administration. A social studies coordinator also will be added to the staff. Administration changes will take effect July 1.

GILL SAID HE would like to fill the three new positions from within the district. The coordinator's job carries a base salary of $18,000 and the two assistant superintendent salaries are negotiable, he said.

Gill said the change is designed to relieve Marjorie Beu, assistant superintendent for instruction, and Associate Supt. John Barger of principal evaluation responsibilities so they are free for other work.

"The biggest change will be in John's (Barger) job," Gill said. Barger will become associate superintendent for planning, research and development.

"So many districts with declining enrollments have been caught off guard," said Gill. Barger will be responsible for charting the district's future enrollments, expenditures, budgeting needs and goals, Gill said, a job Barger has been doing on a smaller scale due to his previous responsibilities.

GILL SAID the over-all cost of the reorganized administration to the district will be a "few thousand dollars more." The district is currently budgeting $293,892 for its administrative staff.

In other board action, approval was given to an application for $118,595 in state funds to continue the district's bilingual education project. The district plans to spend $34,963 of its own funds to supplement the program next year.

Now in its third year, Dist. 21's bilingual-bicultural program teaches 222 Spanish-speaking students English as a second language as well as aspects of their Spanish heritage.

Buffalo Grove High wins accreditation

High School Dist. 214's newest school, Buffalo Grove High School, 1100 W. Dundee Rd., has received full accreditation from the North Central Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

"Accreditation by the NCA means the school has met the rigorous standards set for membership," said Clarence M. Miller, principal. "These standards are established by more than 4,000 member schools of the commission on schools and they signify that the school has the resources, personnel, and leadership necessary as preconditions for effective education," he said.

The North Central Assn., the nation's largest regional accrediting agency, is made up by more than 4,000 voluntary secondary and elementary schools along with some 700 colleges and universities in 19 states.

The association works with schools to improve the quality of education through continuous evaluation.

the street and gave his buddy the signal and off he went across the lawns," she said.

"They have to know the penalties are severe. You can tell them the adults are taking back the world. Too many people said they were forgetting it because they were parents, too. Well, a time comes," she said.

"We were a little afraid of retaliation. But we're afraid to let it go on any more," she said.

Aldrich advised residents to try to get a description of the car, the license number and if possible a description of the driver and to notify police as soon as possible.

He said the police department is launching an all-out effort to stop the vandalism. "No more Mr. Nice Guy. Un-huh. No more. This has got to stop," he said.

Making them adoptable

Foster home for pets? It works

by JOANN VAN WYE

Susie was "wall-to-wall ribs" when she was found wandering around the Rockford area 1½ months ago.

Months of abuse and neglect had left the little beagle deathly scared of people. She had worms, holes in her ears and no skin on her neck. On her own, she probably would have been dead within days.

Today, Susie is a healthy, affectionate dog looking for a new home.

Fortunately for Susie, someone contacted Aid to Animals of Northern Illinois and she was placed in the foster home of Mark and Sandra Keeney, Palatine Township. The Keeneys nursed Susie back to health and gave her the affection she craved.

This is one of many horror stories the members of Aid to Animals run into each week. There are tales of animals tied to railroad tracks, left in abandoned buildings, badly beaten and just generally neglected.

AID TO ANIMALS places as many animals as possible in foster homes until a permanent home and make room for another foster animal."

Before Susie there was Gimp, Bufford, Pumpkin and a number of others. The Keeneys have had as many as five dogs at one time.

FOSTER HOMES are always in short supply, said Joani Sale, a member of Aid to Animals. One of the problems is the people in the foster homes become attached to the animal and adopt him themselves, which is great except it is one less foster home. Mrs. Sale now has three large dogs of her own that all started out as foster animals staying for only a couple of days.

"The more foster homes we have the more cats and dogs we can save," Mrs. Keeney said. Aid to Animals will pay the cost of food and medical treatment for all foster animals until they are adopted.

Sometimes dogs are rescued from the Evanston Pound if they are not adopted right away and placed in a foster home.

"Sooner or later we can find a home for almost any dog. It is just a matter of saving the dog until the home is found," Mrs. Sale said.

If foster homes aren't available dogs are sometimes boarded by Aid to Animals, but this is expensive for the non-profit agency, which started a year and a half ago.

ONE OF THE biggest problems in adopting a dog or cat is when people find out it has been in a pound, Mrs. Sale said. People think a person would not get rid of an animal unless there was something wrong with it. Older dogs are also a problem to find homes for since most people are looking for young puppies or purebreds.

Aid to Animals members try to match animals with families so there will be no future problems. After an animal is adopted there is also a follow-up visit to make sure the animal is being properly cared for.

A contract that is signed by the adoptive family allows Aid to Animals to take back animals that are mistreated.

Aid to Animals asks for a donation of $35 to about $50. Proof the animal has been spayed also is required by Aid to Animals.

"IF A PERSON does not want to give something for a dog then they probably can't afford to feed it," Mrs. Sale said. She said the money is used for medical treatment for animals, boarding of animals, advertising of adoptable animals and food.

Bake sales and a variety of other fund raisers are also used in addition to membership dues.

Mrs. Sale said this year Aid to Animals hopes to raise enough funds to start an education program on animal care in the schools.

Persons who would like to get in touch with Aid to Animals can write P. O. Box 182, Glenview, Ill.

SANDRA KEENEY holds some of the kittens Aid to Animals hopes to place in good homes. The res- ter of adoptable pets in the Palatine Township foster home usually includes 30 dogs and several cats.
